Supreme Court, U. S.
FILED
NOV 12 1980
MICHAEL RODAK, JR., CLERK

80-778

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1980

No.

STATE OF NEW MEXICO AND HAROLD F. OLSON,
Individually and as Director, New Mexico
Department of Game and Fish,
Petitioners,

v.

MESCALERO APACHE TRIBE,
Respondent.

PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE TENTH CIRCUIT

JEFF BINGAMAN
Attorney General of
New Mexico

THOMAS L. DUNIGAN
Deputy Attorney General

P.O. Drawer 1508
Santa Fe, New Mexico 87501
(505) 982-6993

PAUL A. LENZINI
CHAPMAN, DUFF AND PAUL
1730 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
(202) 624-8870

Attorneys for Petitioners

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the Mescalero Apache Tribe has "inherent authority" over wildlife within the Mescalero Apache Reservation which preempts the application of State laws to non-Indians hunting or fishing within the Reservation.

2. Whether the authority of the State of New Mexico to impose its game and fish laws on non-Indians hunting or fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation has been preempted by federal legislation or treaty stipulation.

3. Whether the application of State game and fish laws to non-Indians hunting or fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation infringes on the right of the Mescalero Apache Tribe "to make its own laws and be governed by them" contrary to Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217 (1959).

INDEX

	Page
OPINIONS BELOW	1
JURISDICTION	2
QUESTIONS PRESENTED	2
TREATY AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED	2
STATEMENT OF THE CASE	3
REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT OF CERTIORARI	6
I. The Decision of the Tenth Circuit Presents a Direct Conflict with Rulings of the Ninth Circuit and Other Courts on a Recurring Issue of Importance to Many States	6
II. The Tenth Circuit's Conversion of Limited Tribal Sovereignty Into Exclusive Territorial Sovereignty Precludes the State's Legitimate Interest in Regulating the Activities of Non-Indians	9
III. The Tenth Circuit's "Sources of Preemption," Broadly Based Upon Misinterpretation of Treaty and Statute, Would Oust State Power Over Many Non-Indian Activities on a Reservation	11
IV. The Ruling Below That Application of State Game Laws to Non-Indians Would Infringe Tribal Self-Government Conflicts With Decisions of This and Other Federal Courts and Would Significantly Expand the Exclusionary Effect of Williams v. Lee	19
CONCLUSION	21

Page

APPENDIX .....

Opinion and Judgment of Court of Appeals 1a

Memorandum and Judgment of District Court 30a

Treaty With the Apaches, July 1, 1852, 10 Stat. 979 (1852) 47a

New Mexico Enabling Act, 36 Stat. 557 (1910) .. 48a

Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, 25 U.S.C. § 476 ..... 49a

Public Law 83-280, 67 Stat. 558 (1953), as amended, 18 U.S.C. § 1162(b) 50a

CITATIONS

	Page
CASES:
Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation v. State of Washington, 591 F.2d 89 (9th Cir. 1979)	11
Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians v. North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission, 588 F.2d 75 (4th Cir. 1978), petition for writ of certiorari voluntarily dismissed, 48 U.S.L.W. 3786 (May 22, 1980)	8,11
Ex Parte Crosby, 38 Nev. 389, 149 P. 989 (1915)	7
Fort Mojave Tribe v. County of San Bernadino, 543 F.2d 1253 (9th Cir. 1976), cert. denied, 430 U.S. 983 (1977)	15,18,20
Jicarilla Apache Tribe v. United States, 601 F.2d 1116 (10th Cir. 1979)	13,14
Kennerly v. District Court of Montana, 400 U.S. 423 (1971)	10
Mescalero Apache Tribe v. Jones, 411 U.S. 145 (1973)	17,20
Mescalero Apache Tribe v. O'Cheskey, 625 F.2d 967 (10th Cir. 1980), reh. denied, August 25, 1980	12,13,17
Moe v. Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes, 425 U.S. 463 (1976)	20
Montana ex rel Nepstad v. Danielson, 149 Mont. 438, 427 P.2d 689 (1967)	7
Oklahoma Tax Commission v. Texas Company, 336 U.S. 342 (1949)	20
Oliphant v. Suquamish Tribe, 435 U.S. 191 (1978)	15
Organized Village of Kake v. Egan, 369 U.S. 60 (1961)	13

	Page
State of California v. Quechan Tribe of Indians, 425 F. Supp. 969 (S.D. Calif. 1977), rev'd on other grounds, 595 F.2d 1153 (9th Cir. 1979)	7,15,16, 18,20
State of Washington v. Confederated Tribes of Colville Indian Reservation, 48 U.S.L.W. 4668 (1980)	20
Thomas v. Gay, 169 U.S. 264	20
United States v. State of Montana, 604 F.2d 1162 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. granted, No. 79-1128, 48 U.S.L.W. 3661 (April 14, 1980)	7,12,13, 20
United States v. State of New Mexico, 590 F.2d 323 (10th Cir. 1978)	11
United States v. Winans, 198 U.S. 371 (1905)	9
United States v. Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313 (1978)	15,16
White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Robert M. Bracker, 48 U.S.L.W. 4897 (1980)	10,16,17
White Mountain Apache v. State of Arizona, et al., No. Civ. 77-867 (D. Ariz. June 13, 1978), appeal docketed, No. 78-3427 (9th Cir. November 8, 1978)	7,11,15, 18,20
Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217 (1959)	7
STATUTES
Federal Trespass Law, 18 U.S.C. § 1165	7
Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, 25 U.S.C. § 476	7,14
New Mexico Enabling Act, 36 Stat. 557 (1910)	13
Public Law 83-280, 67 Stat. 588 (1953), as amended, 18 U.S.C. § 1162(b)	7,18
Treaty With the Apaches, 10 Stat. 979 (1852)	12
MISCELLANEOUS
78 I.D. 101 (1971)	7

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1980

No.

STATE OF NEW MEXICO and HAROLD F. OLSON, Individually and as Director, New Mexico Department of Game and Fish, Petitioners,

v.

MESCALERO APACHE TRIBE,
Respondent.

PETITION FOR WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE TENTH CIRCUIT

Petitioners State of New Mexico and Harold F. Olson, individually and as Director of the New Mexico Department of Game and Fish, respectfully petition for a writ of certiorari to review the judgment and opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit entered in this proceeding on August 13, 1980.

OPINIONS BELOW

The judgment entered in this case by the United States District Court for the District of New Mexico on August 2, 1978, which appears in the Appendix at 28a, is unreported. The memorandum opinion of the District Court of August 2, 1978, also unreported, appears at Appendix 30a. The opinion of the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit appears at Appendix 2a.

JURISDICTION

The judgment of the United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit, Appendix at 1a, was entered on August 13, 1980. The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked pursuant to 28 U.S.C. § 1254(1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether the Mescalero Apache Tribe has "inherent authority" over wildlife within the Mescalero Apache Reservation which preempts the application of State laws to non-Indians hunting or fishing within the Reservation.

2. Whether the authority of the State of New Mexico to impose its game and fish laws on non-Indians hunting or fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation has been preempted by federal legislation or treaty stipulation.

3. Whether the application of State game and fish laws to non-Indians hunting or fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation infringes on the right of the Mescalero Apache Tribe "to make its own laws and be governed by them" contrary to Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217 (1959).

TREATY AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

Material portions of pertinent treaty and statutory provisions are included in the Appendix at 47a et seq.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

A. The Factual Background

In July 1975, the Mescalero Apache Tribe opened the Inn of the Mountain Gods located on the Mescalero Apache Indian Reservation in south central New Mexico. The Inn of the Mountain Gods is a deluxe, tourist resort complex featuring a luxury hotel, a stocked lake for fishing, boating and water sports, a golf course, pro shop, tennis facilities, swimming pool, trap and skeet shooting range, a stables complex, paddle tennis courts, restaurants, liquor lounges, and convention facilities (R. Vol. I, p. 120).[1] The Inn is operated by the Mescalero Apache Tribe as part of a tourism program established by the Tribe to attract non-Indians to the Reservation as well as to the Sierra Blanca Ski Resort, a tribal commercial enterprise located adjacent to the Reservation. In connection with operation of the Inn of the Mountain Gods, the Mescalero Apache Tribe also maintains a hunting and fishing business, including "package" hunts of big game animals, and a camping and picnicking program. "Package" hunts of big game animals include hunting fees, lodging at the Inn, guide service, and various other hunter needs (R. Vol. I, pp. 121-122). The Inn of the Mountain Gods, as well as the Tribe's hunting and fishing business, caters almost exclusively to non-Indian patrons from across the country. At least 97 percent of the guests at the Inn of the Mountain Gods, including hunters and anglers, are non-Indians from off the reservation (R. Vol. I, pp. 121, 122). Public highways and other State public facilities and services are used by persons hunting and fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation (R. Vol. I, p. 136).

In 1977 the Mescalero Apache Tribe adopted a general hunting and fishing ordinance which states it is applicable to all persons, Indian and non-Indian, who hunt or fish on the

---

[1] "R. Vol." refers to a particular volume of the record filed in the Tenth Circuit.

Reservation. The ordinance requires non-Indians to purchase a tribal permit, and it establishes seasons and bag limits. The ordinance also declares that "no state license of any kind shall be necessary for any person" with respect to hunting or fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation (R. Vol. I, p. 122).[2]

Both federal and state agencies have assisted the Tribe's hunting and fishing business. In 1966 and 1967 the National Park Service donated 162 elk to the Tribe. These were shipped into New Mexico pursuant to a permit issued by the New Mexico Game and Fish Department which had encouraged the project (R. Vol. I, p. 124). A Bureau of Indian Affairs range conservationist makes aerial surveys and pellet group transect studies to estimate deer, elk, antelope and bear populations, and he recommends seasons and bag limits for these species to the Tribal Council (R. Vol. I, pp. 122, 123). The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service provides technical assistance respecting management of fish, and the Service stocks reservation streams and several man-made lakes built with federal funds (R. Vol. I, p. 123).

The New Mexico Department of Game and Fish has in the past stocked streams on the Reservation and has supplied other assistance including the training of conservation officers at the request of the Tribe (R. Vol. I, pp. 123, 124-125). The elk, deer and bear populations in south central New Mexico range freely on and off the Mescalero Apache Reservation throughout the year (R. Vol. I, p. 124). Moreover, the State has maintained wildlife conservation programs of long standing in areas surrounding the Reservation (R. Vol. I, pp. 125-128), and State officers enforced wildlife laws and regulations on the Reservation against nontribal members until 1969 when the [2] Prior to 1977 the tribe's hunting brochures stated that all New Mexico hunting regulations apply on the Reservation (R. Vol. I, p. 125).

---

Tribe informed the State that its fish and game officers would no longer be welcome on the Reservation without tribal permission (R. Vol. I, pp. 130, 131). Thus the assertion by the Court of Appeals that the State is unable to claim that it or its lands played any significant role in the creation and preservation of the reservation wildlife resource is contradicted by the record.

From at least 1971 through the period of this litigation virtually all of the big game permits authorized by the Mescalero Apache Tribe have been sold (R. Vol. I, pp. 138-139). The non-Indian demand for big game and package hunts has each year exceeded the number of permits available (R. Vol. I, p. 135). Revenues from the tribal hunting and fishing program as well as from the operation of the Inn of the Mountain Gods have increased annually over the last several years (R. Vol. I, pp. 135-136).

B. Proceedings in the Courts Below

On July 7, 1977, the Mescalero Apache Tribe filed an action for declaratory and injunctive relief alleging, inter alia, that enforcement of the hunting and fishing laws of the State of New Mexico against persons hunting or fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation, either once such persons are on the reservation or after they have departed from the reservation, infringes on tribal sovereignty, conflicts with the Treaty of July 1, 1852, between the United States and the Apaches, 10 Stat. 979, and with certain other specified federal constitutional and statutory provisions. The complaint urged the District Court to declare that jurisdiction to regulate hunting and fishing on the reservation is vested in the Tribe and the United States to the complete exclusion of the State of New Mexico.

The District Court determined that the Mescalero Apache Tribe has an inherent right to control hunting and fishing within tribal territory which had been neither abrogated nor surrendered. The District Court found that this right to control rested exclusively with the United States and the Mescalero Apache Tribe because, although Congress could relinquish this authority to the several states, the Court found no federal legislation conferring upon the State of New Mexico authority to regulate on the Mescalero Apache Reservation. The District Court also concluded that the federally approved game and fish ordinances of the Mescalero Apache Tribe and its federally supported game and fish program on the Reservation constituted an "integrated scheme that results in the federal preemption of fish and game law on the Mescalero Apache Reservation." Appendix at 45a. The District Court enjoined the State of New Mexico from enforcing its hunting and fishing laws "against any person either on the reservation or after they [sic] have left the reservation for acts done in the reservation." Appendix at 29a.

The United States Court of Appeals for the Tenth Circuit affirmed the District Court, holding that the Mescalero Apache Tribe had "inherent authority" over wildlife within the Reservation which preempted the application of state law to any person within its tribal territory; that the application of state game and fish laws to non-Indians hunting or fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation had been preempted by federal legislation and treaty stipulation; and that application of state game and fish laws to non-Indians hunting or fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation infringed on tribal self-government.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

I. The Decision of the Tenth Circuit Presents a Direct Conflict with Rulings of the Ninth Circuit and Other Courts On a Recurring Issue of Importance to Many States.

The court below held that New Mexico conservation laws relating to taking of wildlife by nontribal members on the Mescalero Apache Reservation are preempted by federal law and also unlawfully infringe upon the right of reservation Indians "to make their own laws and be ruled by them." The holding of the Tenth Circuit is in square conflict on both the federal preemption question and the Williams v. Lee infringement question with the holding of the Ninth Circuit in United States v. State of Montana, 604 F.2d 1162 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. granted, No. 79-1128, 48 U.S.L.W. 3661 (April 14, 1980).[3]

State authority to regulate hunting and fishing by nontribal members on an Indian reservation has been upheld in a number of cases. White Mountain Apache Tribe v. State of Arizona, No. Civ. 77-867, (D. Ariz., June 13, 1978), appeal docketed, No. 78-3427 (9th Cir. Nov. 8, 1978); State of California v. Quechan Tribe of Indians, 424 F. Supp. 969 (S.D. Calif. 1977), rev'd on other grounds, 595 F.2d 1153 (9th Cir. 1979); Montana ex rel. Nepstad v. Danielson, 149 Mont. 438, 427 P.2d 689 (1967); Ex Parte Crosby, 38 Nev. 389, 149 P. 989 (1915).[4] And, in direct contrast to the ruling of the Tenth Circuit in the instant case, such federal enactments as the Indian Reorganization Act, 25 U.S.C. §476, and Public Law 280, 18 U.S.C. §1162(b), and the Federal Trespass Law, 18 U.S.C. §1165, have been held not to be preemptive of state wildlife conservation laws insofar as such laws apply to nontribal

---

[3] No cross petition for writ of certiorari was filed by respondents United States and Crow Tribe in United States v. State of Montana, supra, and hence the Ninth Circuit ruling that state fish and game laws apply to nontribal members who obtain permission from the tribe to hunt and fish on the Crow Reservation is not before this Court in No. 79-1128.

[4] The Solicitor of the Department of the Interior in 1971 issued a formal opinion advising that nontribal members are subject to state game laws on an Indian reservation. 78 I.D. 101 (1971). During 1976 the Solicitor's Opinion was withdrawn without explanation.

members. E.g., White Mountain Apache Tribe v. State of Arizona, supra.[5]

The virtually identical issue of applicability of state fishing regulations to nontribal anglers was decided adversely to the state in Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians v. North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission, 588 F. 2d 75 (4th Cir. 1978). The State of North Carolina sought review in this Court by certiorari in No. 78-1653 and the views of the Solicitor General were requested by this Court on June 18, 1979. In his memorandum in response to the Court's invitation, the Solicitor General observed that the question was both important and recurring and that certiorari should be granted:

> In our view, the decision of the Court of Appeals is correct. Nevertheless, like respondents—who have acquiesced in the grant of certiorari—we believe review by this Court is warranted. As set forth more fully in our brief in No. 78-1177, White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Robert M. Bracker, we submit the permissible limits of state taxation of on-reservation transactions involving non-Indians is an important and recurring issue that should be resolved by this Court. This Court has already set for argument State of Washington v. Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation, No. 78-630, which presents one facet of this question.

---

[5] The unreported memorandum opinion of the District Court in White Mountain Apache Tribe v. State of Arizona, supra, is set forth in the Appendix to the petition for writ of certiorari in North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission v. Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, No. 78-1653.

Memorandum for the United States, 2-3.[6] Petitioner submits that the question is indeed an important question of state-tribal jurisdiction, that it is a recurring question, and that a square conflict exists between holdings in the Tenth Circuit and Fourth Circuit, on the one hand, and the Ninth Circuit and U.S. district courts.

II. The Tenth Circuit's Conversion of Limited Tribal Sovereignty Into Exclusive Territorial Sovereignty Precludes the State's Legitimate Interest In Regulating the Activities of Non-Indians.

The ratio decidendi of the court below is difficult to isolate, the opinion constituting a collection of abstract statements from Indian cases in the Supreme Court. While asserting that the applicability of state regulation within a reservation depends upon whether the subject matter has been preempted by federal law or whether state regulation infringes on tribal self-government, Appendix at 8a, the decision of the court below actually proceeds on an entirely different course. Instead of an analysis based on federal preemption or interference with tribal self-government, the Tenth Circuit by way of alternate holding declares that its analysis proceeds from the premise of tribal sovereignty: "The sovereign powers of the tribe in wildlife management are so pervasive that sovereignty here moves from a mere backdrop into a leading role on the litigational stage." Appendix at 9a. Invoking United States v. Winans, 198 U.S. 371 (1905), for the proposition that an Indian treaty is not a grant to Indians but "a grant of rights from them," Appendix at 10a, and also invoking the Declaration of Independence, Appendix at 12a, the Tenth Circuit holds that the tribe's inherent sovereign authority over wildlife on the reservation is exclusive of state regulation. Appendix at 10a.

[6] Prior to action on the petition by this Court the petitioner moved to dismiss the petition for writ of certiorari in light of intervening action by the North Carolina legislature suggesting mootness of the cause. This Court ordered No. 78-1653 dismissed on May 22, 1980.

The Tenth Circuit decision badly misinterprets Indian law as well as the federal system. Application of the two conditions, federal preemption and tribal self-government, to the assertion of state regulatory authority on a reservation accomodates all interests. The power of Congress here is plenary and the fact is that an Indian tribe is sovereign to the extent that, and solely in the manner that, Congress permits it to be sovereign. Kennerly v. District Court of Montana, 400 U.S. 423 (1971). Accordingly, analysis properly proceeds by asking whether Congress has legislatively preempted state power. If no federal preemption is manifested by specific congressional enactment the inquiry then turns to the question of actual infringement of tribal self-government. Thus state law will be held inapplicable, even if not specifically preempted by Congress, if it infringes internal tribal affairs because traditional notions of Indian self-government "are so deeply engrained in our jurisprudence." White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 48 U.S.L.W. 4897, 4899(1980). A finding of Indian "sovereignty" is thus the conclusion which results from applying the dual analysis. But in the Tenth Circuit's decision Indian sovereignty is the starting point, not solely the conclusion, and that is a fundamental misconception having broad potential to undermine historic state regulation of non-Indian activity on a reservation.

New Mexico plainly has a legitimate interest in preserving and regulating the exploitation by non-Indians of the wildlife resources of the state which range on and off the Reservation. The holding of the court below, starting as it does from the premise of territorial sovereignty in the tribe, provides no analytical framework in which to weigh the legitimate interests of the state.

The Mescalero Apache Reservation is one of twenty-six Indian reservations and pueblos located within the State of New Mexico. These twenty-six Indian enclaves comprise 7,348,563 acres or 11,482 square miles. Each of these other Indian enclaves in New Mexico could become a haven for non-Indian activity free of State law on the model of the Mescalero Apache enterprise. Efficient, effectual statewide game management would be impossible under these circumstances.

On a larger scale, if the decision below stands, Indian tribes all over the country may adopt the Mescalero model featuring tribal operation of a commercial hunting and fishing enterprise in an attempt to free their virtually exclusive non-Indian patronage from the requirements of state law and to avail themselves of the accompanying competitive advantages. Indeed, this type of enterprise is already spreading. See Confederated Tribes of Colville Indian Reservation v. State of Washington, 591 F.2d 89 (9th Cir. 1979); Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians v. North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission, 588 F.2d 75 (4th Cir. 1978), petition for writ of certiorari voluntarily dismissed, 48 U.S.L.W. 3786 (May 22, 1980); White Mountain Apache Tribe v. State of Arizona, No. Civ. 77-867 (D. Ariz. June 13, 1978), appeal docketed, No. 78-3427 (9th Cir. November 8, 1978). Moreover, the Mescalero model is now being used with respect to other Indian enterprises such as the operation of liquor facilities in an effort to immunize non-Indian patrons from state law for the commercial advantage of the Indian tribe. See, for example, United States v. State of New Mexico, 590 F. 2d 323 (10th Cir. 1978).

III. The Tenth Circuit's "Sources of Preemption," Broadly Based Upon Misinterpretation of Treaty and Statute, Would Oust State Power Over Many Non-Indian Activities on a Reservation.

The Court of Appeals determined that application of state law to non-Indians hunting or fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation has been preempted by (1) the Treaty of July 1, 1852, between the United States and the Apaches, 10 Stat. 979; (2) the Enabling Act for New Mexico, 36 Stat. 557 (1910); (3) the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, 25 U.S.C. § 476; (4) the tribal constitution and ordinances enacted pursuant to the Indian Reorganization Act; (5) federal developmental assistance; and (6) Public Law 280, 67 Stat. 590 (1953). Appendix at 14a-18a.

a. Treaty of July 1, 1852. The court below found the Treaty of July 1, 1852, to be an "expression of federal dominance on the reservation" which completely preempted the application of state law even to non-Indians on the Reservation. Pointing to language in Articles 1 and 9 of the Treaty, the court stated:

> In Article 1 of that document, the Tribe submits itself "exclusively [to] the laws, jurisdiction, and government of the United States of America." Treaty with the Apaches, July 1, 1852, 10 Stat. 979 (1852) (emphasis added). Further, the Treaty provides that the United States shall "designate, settle, and adjust [the Tribe's] territorial boundaries, and pass and execute . . . such laws as may be deemed conducive to the prosperity and happiness of [the Mescalero Apaches]." Id., art. 9, 10 Stat. 980.

Appendix at 14a-15a. The full text of these provisions, Appendix at 47a, does not sustain the interpretation of the court below. Read in full, these treaty provisions mean only that the tribe and its members recognized the sovereignty of the United States against which they had previously waged war, and that the United States would, in turn, provide a place for the tribe to live. The meaning and significance accorded these treaty stipulations by the court below is not only at variance with the full text, it is also inconsistent with another decision of the Tenth Circuit, Mescalero Apache Tribe v. O'Cheskey, 625 F.2d 967 (10th Cir. 1980), reh. denied, August 25, 1980, and with the Ninth Circuit decision in United States v. Montana, supra. In Mescalero Apache Tribe v. O'Cheskey, supra, the Treaty of July 1, 1852, was not deemed to preempt application of New Mexico's gross receipts tax to non-Indians doing business with the tribe on the reservation. The court in O'Cheskey stated:

> [The Treaty] was an agreement entered into with some Apaches, including some Mescaleros, and was ratified by > Congress . . . . It was a treaty of 'peace and friendship.' As this was all it purported to be, it established no rights generally for either party nor any rights in land. See Choate v. Trapp, 224 U.S. 665 . . . . The Mescaleros were then under the complete sovereignty of the United States. The Treaty thus does not appear to be of any significance as to our problem.

625 F.2d at 971. The court below failed to explain why the "federal dominance" expressed in the Treaty preempts one set of state laws but does not preempt another set. In United States v. Montana, supra, the Ninth Circuit dealt with the Treaty of 1858 with the Crow Tribe, which contains provisions similar to those involved here, but did not deem that treaty to preempt application of state laws to non-Indians hunting and fishing on the Crow Reservation.

b. The New Mexico Enabling Act. The court below concluded that the Enabling Act for New Mexico, 36 Stat. 557 (1910), which places Indian lands in New Mexico "under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States," taken in conjunction with the "exclusivity" language of the Treaty of July 1, 1852, preempts state law: "In the area of resource management, the treaty language in this case suggests the 'absolute' jurisdiction is indeed 'exclusive' jurisdiction." Appendix at 15a.

Aside from the fact that neither the Treaty of July 1, 1852, nor the Enabling Act contains any mention of hunting and fishing by non-Indians, or for that matter by tribal members themselves, the decision of the court below is contrary to this Court's decision in Organized Village of Kake v. Egan, 369 U.S. 60 (1962), and the Tenth Circuit's own decisions in Mescalero Apache Tribe v. O'Cheskey, supra, and Jicarilla Apache Tribe v. United States, 601 F.2d 1116 (10th Cir. 1979).

In Organized Village of Kake, this Court was called upon to interpret section 4 of the Alaska Statehood Act in which the state disclaimed all right to and the United States retained

"absolute jurisdiction and control" over, inter alia, lands and property held by Indians. After an extensive review of case law and legislative history, this Court concluded that:

> [T]he words "absolute jurisdiction and control" are not intended to oust the State completely from regulation of Indian "property" (including fishing rights). "Absolute" in Section 4 carries the gloss of its predecessor statutes meaning undiminished not exclusive.

369 U.S. at 71. And, in Jicarilla Apache Tribe v. United States, supra, the Tenth Circuit actually rejected the notion that the New Mexico Enabling Act established Indian reservations as exclusive federal jurisdictional enclaves. In Jicarilla Apache, the Tenth Circuit stated:

> By 1910, the date of the enactment of New Mexico's Enabling Act, both the Congress and the United States Supreme Court had established a procedure whereby Indian Reservations might be created as exclusive federal enclaves within states and territories similar to military reservations created under the Arsenals and Dockyards Clause (U.S. Const. Art. I, § 8, Cl. 17). This procedure was followed exclusively only with respect to the Kansas Indians. A different procedure was followed with respect to the grant of New Mexico's statehood. In any event, today there is no exclusive federal jurisdictional Indian Reservation in the United States.

601 F.2d at 1129. The Tenth Circuit's decision in the instant case departs from previous decisions of both this Court and of the Tenth Circuit itself.

c. Indian Reorganization Act of 1934. The Tenth Circuit also inferred preemption of state authority over non-Indian hunting or fishing from the language of the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934 which "reconfirms" in Indian tribes organizing under the Act "all powers vested in any Indian tribe . . . by existing law." The court below reasoned that tribal power over reservation hunting and fishing was "unquestionably vested" prior to 1934, and thus its "reconfirmation" in the Indian Reorganization Act gave the Act itself preemptive effect. The court further observed that tribal ordinances regarding hunting and fishing on the reservation may themselves serve to preempt state law on the reservation.

The lower court's conclusions in this regard are contrary to this Court's decision in Oliphant v. Suquamish Tribe, 435 U.S. 191 (1978); United States v. Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313 (1978); the Ninth Circuit's decision in Fort Mojave Tribe v. County of San Bernadino, 543 F.2d 1253 (9th Cir. 1976) cert. denied, 430 U.S. 983 (1977), the decision of the U.S. District Court for the District of Arizona in White Mountain Apache Tribe v. State of Arizona, et al., supra, and the decision of the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of California in State of California v. Quechan Tribe of Indians, supra.

With respect to the effect of the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, this Court in Oliphant v. Suquamish Tribe has said:

> Respondents do contend that Congress has "confirmed" the power of Indian tribes to try and punish non-Indians through the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, 25 U.S.C. § 476, and the Indian Civil Rights Act of 1968, 25 U.S.C. § 1302. Neither Act, however, addresses, let alone "confirms", tribal criminal jurisdiction over non-Indians. The Indian Reorganization Act merely gives each Indian tribe the right "to organize for its common welfare" and to "adopt an appropriate constitution and by-laws." With certain specific additions not relevant here, the tribal council is to have such powers as are vested "by existing law."

435 U.S. at 196, n.6. Thus, whatever powers the Mescalero Apache Tribe may have "by existing law" with respect to regulating hunting and fishing on the Reservation,[7] this Court has determined that the Indian Reorganization Act neither confirms such powers nor do such powers somehow infuse the Act with preemptive effect with respect to the applicability of state law to non-Indians on Indian land.

d. Federal Developmental Assistance. The court below also found preemption of state law in the federal assistance provided to the Mescalero Apache Tribe by the Department of the Interior in the development of a tribal hunting and fishing business enterprise. This conclusion on the part of the court below likewise conflicts with decisions of this Court and with at least one other decision of the Tenth Circuit itself.

The federal assistance which the court below considered to be preemptive of state law was a donation of elk, fish stocking of reservation lakes, technical assistance on fish management, and aerial surveys and animal pellet studies by a Bureau of Indian Affairs range conservationist to assess wildlife populations.

The finding of the Tenth Circuit that this degree of federal assistance to the tribe preempts the application of state law to non-Indian hunters and anglers on the Reservation is inconsistent with a standard for preemption recently expressed by this Court in White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 48 U.S.L.W. 4897 (1980). In this case, this Court declared that congressional enactments and comprehensive implementing regulations which establish a pervasive federal regulatory scheme (as opposed to merely federal material and technical assistance) must be involved in order to oust state law from application on [7] Apart from its power as a landowner to exclude non-Indians from the Reservation or to place conditions on their entry onto the Reservation, an Indian Tribe may enforce police regulations only against its own members. See United States v. Wheeler, supra; State of California v. Quechan Tribe of Indians, supra.

---

an Indian reservation. Indeed, as explained in White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, supra:

> Our decision today is based on the preemptive effect of the comprehensive federal regulatory scheme, which, like that in Warren Trading Post Company v. Arizona Tax Commission, supra, leaves no room for the additional burdens sought to be imposed by state laws.

48 U.S.L.W. at 4901, n. 15.

In Mescalero Apache Tribe v. Jones, 411 U.S. 145 (1973), federal involvement in an Indian commercial enterprise, similar to the degree of federal activity involved in this case, failed to preempt the application of state law to the tribal activity. In that case the Bureau of Indian Affairs had conducted a feasibility study, equipment and construction money had been provided by a loan from the federal government, and the necessary land was supplied by the United States Forest Service on a long-term lease to the tribe. The degree of federal activity in the instant case falls below even that involved in the Jones case.

Moreover, the Tenth Circuit itself acknowledged, in Mescalero Apache Tribe v. O'Cheskey, supra, that federal participation and interest in a particular Indian enterprise does not alone preempt state law from application to non-Indians involved in the venture. In that case, the Tenth Circuit stated:

> Finally, the extent of the federal government's role in this area, as a measure of federal interest in Indian affairs, is significant. Federal participation and interest in this particular business venture is extensive, but that alone is not enough to immunize these contractors from state taxation.

625 F.2d at 974 (concurring opinion). The decision of the court below that the measure of federal assistance involved in this case preempts state law cannot be squared with decisions of this Court or with other decisions of the Tenth Circuit itself.

e. Public Law 280. Finally, the Court of Appeals determined that federal preemption resulted from "the negative inferences from Public Law 280." Appendix at 14a. The court reasoned that because Public Law 280, 18 U.S.C. § 1162(b),[8] protects "traditional" Indian hunting and fishing rights from being hindered, even in those states which accept Public Law 280 jurisdiction, a non-Public Law 280 state like New Mexico may not, a fortiori, hinder such rights.

This holding of the court below stands in conflict with the Ninth Circuit decision in Fort Mojave Tribe v. County of San Bernadino, supra, where the court interpreted Public Law 280 to preserve rights and immunities granted to an Indian tribe but not to extend such rights or immunities to non-Indians undertaking activity on a reservation. Accordingly, Public Law 280 did not prevent the imposition of a state possessory interest tax on a non-Indian lessee of reservation land.[9] If Public Law 280 does not directly preempt state law from application to non-Indians on Indian land, it surely does not do so by "negative inference." The "grandfather" role of the proviso to Public Law 280 is well summarized by the District Court in White Mountain Apache Tribe v. State of Arizona:

> After all, Public Law 280 only grandfathers rights held by the Indian tribe under "Federal treaty, agreement, or statute." The executive order establishing the Fort Apache Reservation does not authorize tribal preemption of state

---

[8] The Court of Appeals had reference to the following proviso in Public Law 280:

> Nothing in this section . . . shall deprive any Indian or Indian tribe . . . of any right, privilege, or immunity afforded under federal treaty, agreement, or statute with respect to hunting, trapping, or fishing, or the control, licensing or regulation thereof.

[9] On the same reasoning, state fish and game laws were held applicable to non-Indians on an Indian reservation in State of California v. Quechan Tribe of Indians, 424 F. Supp. 969, rev'd on other grounds, 595 F.2d 1153 (9th Cir. 1979).

game and fish law. Neither federal trespass law nor the Indian Reorganization Act delegate legislative authority to the White Mountain Tribe. Therefore, Public Law 280, by itself, cannot be a congressional delegation of regulatory authority.[10]

There is thus wide variation between the circuits not only as to the preemptive force of particular enactments by Congress and treaty provisions but also as to the gauge to be used in the measurement. The divergent results in the lower courts on these important jurisdictional issues cannot be brought to rest by ambiguous formulas; neither do the problems created improve with age. This Court should provide guidance.

IV. The Ruling Below that Application of State Game Laws to Non-Indians Would Infringe Tribal Self-Government Conflicts With Decisions of This and Other Federal Courts and Would Significantly Expand the Exclusionary Effect of Williams v. Lee.

In an alternate holding, the court below concluded that application of New Mexico game and fish laws to non-Indians on the Mescalero Apache Reservation would infringe on the right of the reservation Indians to make their own laws and be ruled by them. This conclusion was based on three perceived outcomes of such enforcement. Foremost is the court's perception that state enforcement would financially impair the Tribe's hunting and fishing business enterprise. Second, the Court of Appeals believed that state enforcement would interfere with the tribal regulatory program over a "value generated on the reservation." Finally, the court observed that enforcement of state regulations as to nontribal hunters and anglers would deny the tribe an opportunity to develop its own system of resource management. Appendix at 19a-21a.

---

[10] Appendix, p. A-52, No. 78-1653, Petition for Writ of Certiorari in North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission v. Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians.

The factual foundation for the foregoing assertions is, of course, disputed by Petitioner. That aside, however, the Tenth Circuit's conclusion of infringement goes well beyond the notion of preserving tribal autonomy over internal affairs of the Indians. On the question of financial impairment of the Tribe's commercial activity, for example, the decision below is at odds with the decisions of this Court in State of Washington v. Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation, 48 U.S.L.W. 4668(1980); Mescalero Apache Tribe v. Jones, supra; Oklahoma Tax Commission v. Texas Company, 336 U.S. 342 (1949); Thomas v. Gay, 169 U.S. 264 (1898); and Fort Mojave Tribe v. County of San Bernadino, supra; and with the decision of the Tenth Circuit itself in Mescalero Apache Tribe v. O'Cheskey, supra. Contrary to the Tenth Circuit's view, these cases hold that imposition of a non-discriminatory tax or regulatory system on non-Indians doing business with an Indian tribe is permissible even if it results in an economic burden on the tribe. Moe v. Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes, 425 U.S. 463 (1976).

With respect to the Tenth Circuit's holding that state enforcement would interfere with the tribal regulatory program and would deny the tribe an opportunity to develop a system of resource management, the court has reached a result contrary to that of the Ninth Circuit in United States v. State of Montana, supra, and Fort Mojave Tribe v. County of San Bernadino, supra, as well as the decisions reached by courts in State of California v. Quechan Tribe of Indians and White Mountain Apache Tribe v. State of Arizona, supra.

Those cases recognize that non-discriminatory, state enforcement against only non-Indians on Indian land does not deprive a tribe of its right to impose its own regulatory measures or to adopt its own conservation practices. With these options remaining open to the tribe, tribal self-government is not infringed. The Tenth Circuit's conclusion to the contrary stands alone.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, the petition for writ of certiorari should be granted.

Respectfully submitted,

JEFF BINGAMAN
Attorney General
of the State of New Mexico

THOMAS L. DUNIGAN
Deputy Attorney General
P. O. Drawer 1508
Santa Fe, New Mexico 87501
(505) 982-6993

PAUL A. LENZINI
CHAPMAN, DUFF, AND PAUL
1730 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C. 20006
Attorneys for Petitioners

Dated: November 12, 1980

APPENDIX

United States Court of Appeals

FOR THE TENTH CIRCUIT

JULY TERM—August 13, 1980

Before Honorable William E. Doyle, Honorable Jean S. Breitenstein, and Honorable Monroe G. McKay, Circuit Judges

MESCALERO APACHE TRIBE,
Plaintiff-Appellee,
vs.
STATE OF NEW MEXICO and WILLIAM S. HUEY, Individually and as Director of New Mexico Department of Game and Fish, or his Successors in Office,
Defendants-Appellants,
INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF FISH AND WILDLIFE AGENCIES, UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, JICARILLA APACHE TRIBE, STATE OF UTAH, Amici Curiae.

JUDGMENT
No. 78-1790
(D.C. No. 77-395-M)

This cause came on to be heard on the record on appeal from the United States District Court for the District of New Mexico, and was argued by counsel.

Upon consideration whereof, it is ordered that the judgment of that court is affirmed. Judge Breitenstein concurs.

Test .....

.....

PUBLISH

United States Court of Appeals

TENTH CIRCUIT

MESCALERO APACHE TRIBE,
Plaintiff-Appellee,

v. No. 78-1790

STATE OF NEW MEXICO and
WILLIAM S. HUEY, Individually
and as Director of New Mexico
Department of Game and Fish,
or his Successors in Office,
Defendants-Appellants.

APPEAL FROM THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF NEW MEXICO
(D.C. Civil Case No. 77-395-M)

Jeff Bingaman, Attorney General, and Thomas L. Dunigan, Deputy Attorney General (Thomas Patrick Whelan, Jr., Assistant Attorney General, with them on the briefs), Santa Fe, New Mexico, for Defendants-Appellants.

George E. Fettinger (Kim Jerome Gottschalk with him on the brief), Fettinger & Bloom, Alamogordo, New Mexico, for Plaintiff-Appellee.

Steven E. Carroll, Attorney (James W. Moorman, Assistant Attorney General; Robert L. Klarquist and Edward J. Shawaker, Attorneys, on the brief), Department of Justice, Washington, D.C., for the United States as amicus curiae.

Paul A. Lenzini and Susan A. Goltz, Attorneys, Chapman, Duff and Paul, Washington, D.C., filed an amicus curiae brief for the International Association of Fish and Wildlife Agencies.

Daniel H. Israel, Native American Rights Fund, Boulder, Colorado; Robert Nordhaus and Adelia W. Kearny, Nordhaus, Moses & Dunn, Albuquerque, New Mexico, filed an amicus curiae brief for the Jicarilla Apache Tribe.

Robert B. Hansen, Utah Attorney General; Richard L. Dewsnup, Assistant Attorney General; and Dallin W. Jensen, Assistant Attorney General, filed an amicus curiae brief for the state of Utah.

Before DOYLE, BREITENSTEIN and McKAY, Circuit Judges

McKAY, Circuit Judge.

This case involves a challenge to the State of New Mexico's attempt to regulate the management and harvesting of wildlife resources within the boundaries of the Mescalero Apache reservation. The Tribe carried its challenge to the district court where it secured a judgment declaring that the State may not apply its hunting and fishing laws to any person, Indian or non-Indian, within the boundaries of the tribal reservation. The court also enjoined the State from enforcing its game laws "against any person either on the Reservation or after they [sic] have left the Reservation for acts done on the Reservation." Record vol. 1, at 221. The State concedes its lack of jurisdiction over tribal members on the reservation, but appeals the district court's resolution as to non-members of the Tribe.[1]

---

[1] For most purposes, the important distinction is between tribal members and non-members, not between Indians and non-Indians. Members of other tribes generally visit the Mescalero reservation on the same footing as non-Indians. See Washington v. Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation, 48 U.S.L.W. 4668, 4675 (1980).

In 1977 the Tribe, as part of "an extensive tourism program designed to bring income and employment to the Reservation,"[2] Record, vol. 1, at 205, adopted various hunting and fishing ordinances to improve management of reservation wildlife resources. These ordinances were adopted pursuant to the tribal constitution and were duly approved by the Secretary of the Interior. Some of the ordinances are clearly inconsistent with state laws.[3] For example, the Tribe specifically does not require that a hunter on its reservation purchase a state license and, in contrast to state law, the Tribe permits elk and antelope hunters to purchase permits in consecutive years. In addition, tribal hunting seasons do not all correspond with those of the State, and bag limits differ. By obeying the more restrictive of the regulations, a non-member hunter on the reservation could conform his behavior to the dictates of both Tribe and State. His doing so, however, would render much of the tribal regulatory scheme a nullity.

The revenue derived directly and indirectly[4] from visiting sportsmen comprises a significant portion of the tribal budget, but reservation hunting and fishing by non-members is but a minuscule part of the overall state

---

[2] The parties stipulated that "[t]he purpose of the tourism program is to provide income for the Mescalero Apache Tribe which may be used for its governmental purposes and economic development." Record, vol. 1, at 121-22.

[3] The Tribe may be seeking to create jurisdictional disputes. However, no negative inference should be attached to such a posture. In fact, a clear intent to preempt state jurisdiction is an element in the Tribe's favor. See Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation, 591 F.2d 89, 91 (9th Cir. 1979).

[4] The Tribe has erected a resort complex where many sportsmen stay while on the reservation. Because of the recreation facilities at the resort, many nonhunters accompany the sportsmen. In recent years direct tribal income from hunting and fishing activities has exceeded $250,000 per year. The indirect revenues increase that total. Record, vol. 1, at 135.

total.[5] Although the State argues that wildlife management efficiency requires its jurisdiction over reservation activities, no claim is made that any species is endangered. Cf. Puyallup Tribe, Inc. v. Department of Game, 433 U.S. 165, 176-77 (1977). In fact, the State agrees that tribal management of reservation wildlife resources has been exemplary, and in conformance with accepted wildlife management procedures. Record, vol. 1, at 134. The Tribe maintains a large, well-trained enforcement staff and receives support from the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

In the factual situation presented by this case, the State is unable to claim that either it or its lands played any significant role in the creation and preservation of the reservation wildlife resources. Instead, much of the reservation wildlife is effectively a creation of the Tribe and the federal government. For example, the antelope population on the reservation is non-migratory, and few animals ever cross the boundaries. In recent years, the herd's protection has been entirely in tribal hands. Furthermore, the Tribe has taken affirmative steps to build an elk herd. Prior to 1966, only 13 elk grazed in the general area of the reservation. In 1966-67, the National Park Service donated 162 elk. Through considerable range development, the Tribe removed cattle from direct competition with the elk for grazing land. The elk herd has grown to 1200, many of which wander off the reservation during part of the year. The migratory elk thus provide significant hunting opportunities for non-members outside the reservation, and the Tribe, despite its fundamental role in herd development, makes no attempt to limit that hunting.

---

[5] For example, in a recent year the Tribe sold 50 elk licenses, while the state sold 14,000. Ten tribal antelope licenses were available, compared to 3500 for the state. Tribal deer licenses permitted the taking of 500 deer; the State issued 100,000 licenses.

The reservation has no natural lakes. Several man-made lakes have been constructed with federal funds and are stocked from a national fish hatchery on the reservation. Federal officials from the hatchery also provide the Tribe with technical assistance. The State has never stocked reservation lakes and no longer stocks any reservation streams. The entire tribal fishing program now exists independent of the State.

I. Justiciability

Before proceeding to the merits, we must dispose of several preliminary matters raised by the State. The State challenges, as it unsuccessfully did below, the Tribe's right to bring this suit. The State asserts that the Tribe has no standing and that the suit is otherwise not justiciable.

On the standing issue, the State argues that "[t]he Tribe is seeking to enjoin the enforcement of State penal statutes which do not apply to it and which do not threaten it or its members in any real, direct and immediate sense." Brief for Appellant at 20. In the State's view, a challenge to the state regulations may be prosecuted only by an aggrieved non-member sportsman. Since the Tribe has sold nearly all of its available hunting and fishing permits,[6] the Tribe has allegedly suffered no revenue losses and no other "injury in fact" by the regulations the State would impose on non-member sportsmen.

The State's understanding of standing requirements is overly narrow. For purposes of standing, federal courts

[6] In the first year that tribal antelope licenses were available, only six of ten were sold. The Tribe has sold all other available licenses, however, and we may safely assume that the antelope license figures reflect a temporary aberration.

may certainly consider the principles of elementary economics. The State's imposition of higher costs on individual sportmen clearly limits the Tribe's ability to raise the prices of its own licenses. Cf. Agua Caliente Band of Mission Indians v. County of Riverside, 442 F.2d 1184, 1186 (9th Cir. 1971). We have no reason to assume that the demand curve for reservation hunting and fishing is so inelastic that the Tribe could charge and receive any imaginable price for its licenses. Even though all tribal licenses are now sold, and applications for licenses exceed the number available, that fact merely reflects the Tribe's conservative adjustment to market forces in devising its own fee structure. Similarly, other conflicts between the tribal and state regulatory structures—e.g., variations in hunting seasons—necessarily deter some non-member hunters from entering the reservation at some times. These conflicts affect the Tribe's own regulatory scheme. They also influence the prices the Tribe may charge and impinge on the Tribe's revenue-raising powers. These effects are not merely speculative, but are the straightforward and immediate results of economic forces. Cf. United States v. Students Challenging Regulatory Agency Procedures, 412 U.S. 669, 683-90 (1973).

Beyond economics, the Tribe has another legitimate basis for standing. When one sovereign entity is alleged to have usurped the authority lawfully belonging to another, the injured sovereign must have standing to challenge the usurpation. Other circuits have routinely found standing, without discussion, when Indian tribes have sought judgments that states were unlawfully interfering with tribal regulation of hunting and fishing. See, e.g., Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation v. Washington, 591

F.2d 89 (9th Cir. 1979); Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians v. North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission, 588 F.2d 75 (4th Cir. 1978).[7]

No other barrier to justiciability is present. The impact of the state regulation upon the Tribe is "sufficiently direct and immediate as to render the issue appropriate for judicial review at this stage." Abbott Laboratories v. Gardner, 387 U.S. 136, 152 (1967). The limits of state jurisdiction on the reservation is an issue now as ripe for resolution as it will ever be. The State has made clear that prosecution of non-member violators of state game laws, with the attendant effects on tribal regulation and revenue-raising, is intended and probable. Record, vol. 1, at 204 Cf. Poe v. Ullman, 367 U.S. 497, 501-2 (1961).

Finally, all indispensable parties are named in the suit. As the district court noted, "A determination that New Mexico game laws are not applicable to non-Indian activity within the Mescalero Apache Reservation cannot injuriously affect the interests of the United States...." Record, vol. 1, at 204. In addition, "no act would be required of the Secretary [of the Interior] regardless of the outcome of the suit." Id. at 205.

II. Federal Preemption

Any attempt by a state to exercise regulatory powers within the confines of a federally recognized, "semi-independent" Indian reservation is precluded if the subject matter has been preempted by federal law or if the [7] Since standing is in part a constitutional concept, a federal court has an obligation to consider the issue even if the parties do not raise it. The lack of discussion in these cases therefore cannot reflect only party failure to press the standing issue.

state regulations infringe on the tribe's rights of self-government. White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 48 U.S.L.W. 4897, 4899 (1980). Accordingly, in this jurisdictional dispute between a state government and an Indian tribe, we must first determine whether the applicable treaty and federal statutes, read against the "backdrop" of Indian sovereignty, preempt exercises of state power. See McClanahan v. Arizona State Tax Commission, 411 U.S. 164, 172 (1973); Mescalero Apache Tribe v. Jones, 411 U.S. 145, 148 (1973); Warren Trading Post Co. v. Arizona Tax Commission, 380 U.S. 685, 690-91 (1965). Under a standard of construction followed from the time of the Marshall Court, we must construe the applicable treaty and statutes liberally in order to further Indian interests. See, e.g., Bryan v. Itasca County, 426 U.S. 373, 392 (1976); McClanahan v. Arizona State Tax Commission, 411 U.S. at 174; Squire v. Copoeman, 351 U.S. 1, 6-7 (1956); Carpenter v. Shaw, 280 U.S. 363, 366-67 (1930); Worcester v. Georgia, 31 U.S. (6 Pet.) 515, 582 (1832).[8]

The sovereign powers of the Tribe in wildlife management are so pervasive that sovereignty here moves from a mere backdrop into a leading role on the litigational stage. The historical relationship between Indian tribes, their lands, and the wild game thereon has of necessity been one of great interdependence. Access to and control of wildlife was "not much less necessary to the existence of the Indians than the atmosphere they breathed." United States v. Winans, 198 U.S. 371, 381 (1905). After a careful, thoughtful analysis, the district court properly determined that, before the signing of the Treaty with the Apaches, July 1, 1852, 10 Stat. 979 (1852), the Tribe "had inherent and complete authority to control the fish and game found within the confines of the tribal territory." Record, vol. 1, at 208. Since the treaty is "not a grant of rights to the Indians, but a grant of rights from them—a reservation of those not granted," Id. (quoting United States v. Winans, 198 U.S. at 381), the Tribe retains its authority even though the treaty itself did not fix the boundaries of the tribal reservation.[9] Cf. Antoine v. Washington, 420 U.S. 194 (1975). Abrogation of any rights protected by treaty, particularly fundamental hunting and fishing privileges, must be explicit to be effective, see Menominee Tribe of Indians v. United States, 391 U.S. 404, 413 (1968), and no congressional enactment here meets that standard. See United States v. Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313, 323 (1978).

[8] The applicable treaty itself mandates "liberal construction . . . to the end that . . . the government of the United States shall so legislate and act as to secure the permanent prosperity and happiness of said Indians." Treaty with the Apaches, July 1, 1852, art. 11, 10 Stat. 980 (1852).

The Tribe's inherent authority stems largely from the traditional reliance on wild game for basic survival needs. See F. Cohen, Handbook of Federal Indian Law 286 (1942). However, the Tribe's historical use of only some species within its territory does not mean that the game control powers reserved by treaty are less than all-encompassing. It is quite irrelevant whether the Mescalero at one time were primarily hunters, fishermen or gatherers. At the treaty's signing, the United States must certainly have understood that the Tribe could alter its use of wildlife as conditions changed. For example, "[it is] inconceivable that the United States intended to withhold from the Indians the right to sustain themselves from any source of food which might be available on their reservation." United States v. Finch, 548 F.2d 822, 832 (9th Cir. 1976), vacated on other grounds, 433 U.S. 676 (1977).

The Tribe's sovereign powers are not, of course, limited to control of wildlife. The Tribe's historical powers [9] The treaty mandated creation of a new tribal territory, but the actual boundaries of the reservation were set by a series of executive orders from 1873 until 1883.

extend to the territory itself. The State acknowledges that the Tribe has, at a minimum, the power of any landowner to exclude non-official persons from the reservation.[10] In the State's view, the Tribe may altogether forbid permission to hunt and fish or may condition the grant of permission upon compliance with state laws, but the Tribe may not exempt a non-member hunter from the application of state laws. The power of a landowner, however, provides only one source—and a secondary one—of tribal authority. See Powers of Indian Tribes, 55 Interior Dec. 14, 48-50 (1934). The Supreme Court has repeatedly stressed "that Indian tribes are unique aggregations possessing attributes of sovereignty over both their members and their territory; they are 'a separate people' possessing 'the power of regulating their internal and social relations.' " United States v. Mazurie, 419 U.S. 544, 557 (1975) (emphasis added) (citations omitted) (quoting United States v. Kagama, 118 U.S. 375, 381-82 (1886)). See Merrion v. Jicarilla Apache Tribe, 617 F.2d 537, 541-43 (10th Cir. 1980); United States v. New Mexico, 590 F.2d 323, 327-28 (10th Cir. 1978) ("Indian nations [are] distinct political communities, having territorial boundaries in which their authority is exclusive"). In its most recent statement, the Court "emphasized that there is a significant geographical component to tribal sovereignty, a component which remains highly relevant to the preemption inquiry; . . . it remains an important factor to weigh in determining whether state authority has exceeded the permissible limits." White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 48 U.S.L.W. 4897, 4901 (1980).

[10] In 1969 the Tribe informed the State that its game and fish officers would be welcome only if they obtained tribal permission to enter the reservation. The State has honored the Tribe's request, but it does not concede the Tribe's power to exclude officials. Brief for Appellants at 9-10. Because of our resolution of the case, we do not reach the issue of the State's enforcement powers on the reservation. The Supreme Court also has not spoken on this question. See Washington v. Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation, 48 U.S.L.W. 4668, 4675 (1980); Moe v. Confederated Salish & Kootenai Tribes, 425 U.S. 463, 468 n.6 (1976).

The State questions the existence of any inherent tribal powers in this case. It argues that the Tribe could not have exclusive rights in any traditional territory because, in effect, there is no traditional territory: "the Mescaleros were being swept from their lands by a tide of white settlers." Brief for Appellants at 37. If we were to accept the State's argument, we would be enshrining the rather perverse notion that traditional rights are not to be protected in precisely those instances when protection is essential, i.e., when a dominant group has succeeded in temporarily frustrating exercise of those rights. We prefer a view more compatible with the theory of this nation's founding: rights do not cease to exist because a government fails to secure them. See The Declaration of Independence (1776).

In regulating game on the reservation, the Tribe thus seeks to exercise its sovereign power in an area in which it unquestionably has a "significant interest." Cf. Washington v. Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation, 48 U.S.L.W. 4668, 4673 (1980). This case is therefore quite unlike Colville, in which the Court rejected tribal claims to an exemption from state taxation of reservation cigarette sales to non-members. Reservation sales outlets were, except in location, identical to their off-reservation competitors, and the product taxed was in no sense a tribal creation. Unlike the situation in this case, no significant tribal interest was involved.

This case is further unlike Colville in that here a definite conflict exists between the tribal regulatory structure and that of the State. In Colville the tribal and state taxing schemes were purely revenue-raising in nature, and dual systems of pure taxation are not inherently conflicting. In contrast, dual regulatory schemes, as the Court implied, necessarily create mutual dislocations. 48 U.S.L.W. at 4674.[11] It is because of this characteristic of regulation that we presume, when Indian tribes under federal protection seek to regulate their traditional interests, that federal law has preempted state jurisdiction. See D. Getches, D. Rosenfelt & C. Wilkinson, Cases and Materials on Federal Indian Law 295-99 (1979). "[T]hose standards of pre-emption that have emerged in other areas of the law" generally do not apply "to federal enactments regulating Indian tribes." White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 48 U.S.L.W. 4897, 4899 (1980). As this court has recently emphasized, "[T]he cases stress that regulatory powers in Indian country or on Indian lands belong to the Congress except for inherent jurisdiction of the tribes. Congress may delegate this authority to the state, but when it does so it must be in specific terms."

---

[11] In Mescalero Apache Tribe v. O'Cheskey, No. 77-2102 (10th Cir. June 5, 1980) (en banc), we were also not faced with dual regulatory schemes. The state tax there at issue, like the Colville tax, was purely revenue-raising in nature, and the Tribe had not imposed its own taxing scheme. In United States v. Montana, 604 F.2d 1162 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. granted, 48 U.S.L.W. 3661 (1980), the Ninth Circuit upheld dual regulation of hunting and fishing on the Crow reservation. The court assumed, however, that tribal-state cooperation would be "forthcoming." 604 F.2d at 1172. Because of the Mescalero Apache Tribe's clear position in this case, we may make no such assumption. See also Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation v. Washington, 591 F.2d 89, 91 (9th Cir. 1979) ("tribal government explicitly acknowledged that state jurisdiction would not constitute an obstacle to its efforts").

United States v. New Mexico, 590 F.2d 323,328 (10th Cir. 1978) (emphasis added).[12]

As important as sovereignty is in this case, we need not consider whether the Tribe's sovereign powers alone are sufficient to preempt state jurisdiction. The Supreme Court has not ruled on that question but has noted, given the pervasiveness of federal treaties and statutes, that it is "something of a moot question." McClanahan v. Arizona State Tax Commission, 411 U.S. 164, 172 n.8 (1973). See Note, Tribal Preemption, 54 Wash. L. Rev. 633, 639 (1979). In this case, the treaty and statutory basis for federal preemption is strong. We see as sources of preemption (1) the treaty; (2) the Enabling Act for New Mexico; (3) the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934; (4) the tribal constitution and ordinances enacted pursuant to the IRA; (5) the extensive federal developmental assistance; and (6) the negative inferences from Public Law 280. These factors, considered in light of the Tribe's inherent powers over reservation land and wildlife, compel our conclusion of preemption.

The applicable treaty, as we have noted, implicitly reserves to the Tribe control over reservation hunting and fishing. In addition, the treaty is explicit in its expression of federal dominance on the reservation. In Article 1 of that document, the Tribe submits itself "exclusively [to] the laws, jurisdiction, and government of the United [12] Insofar as other courts have improperly presumed the existence of state jurisdiction in similar cases, their decisions do not control our determination. See, e.g., United States v. Montana, 604 F.2d 1162, 1172 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. granted, 48 U.S.L.W. 3661 (1980). Nor does past participation by the State in reservation wildlife regulation necessarily limit any tribal claim of sovereign powers. See Brief for Appellant at 55. Past cooperation of the Tribe with the State reflects nothing more than a temporary waiver of the Tribe's preemptive rights in the hunting and fishing area.

States of America." Treaty with the Apaches, July 1, 1852, 10 Stat. 979 (1852) (emphasis added).[13] Further, the treaty provides that the United States shall "designate, settle, and adjust [the Tribe's] territorial boundaries, and pass and execute ... such laws as may be deemed conducive to the prosperity and happiness of [the Mescalero Apaches]." Id., art. 9, 10 Stat. 980.

The treaty's exclusivity language aids our interpretation of the Enabling Act for New Mexico, 36 Stat. 557 (1910), in which New Mexico Indian lands were placed "under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States." Although Organized Village of Kake v. Egan, 369 U.S. 60, 68 (1962), said that " 'absolute' federal jurisdiction is not invariably exclusive jurisdiction," Egan "did not purport to provide guidelines for the exercise of state authority in areas set aside by treaty for the exclusive use and control of Indians." McClanahan v. Arizona State Tax Commission, 411 U.S. 164, 176 n.15 (1973). In the area of resource management, the treaty language in this case suggests that "absolute" jurisdiction is indeed "exclusive" jurisdiction.[14]

The tribal constitution gives to the Mescalero Apache Tribal Council the power "[t]o protect and preserve the property, wildlife and natural resources of the tribe, and [13] New Mexico does not challenge the validity of the treaty. The parties stipulated that it was signed by a representative of the Tribe. Record, vol. 1, at 118.

---

[14] The New Mexico Supreme Court has understood the implications of the McClanahan clarification of Egan. In a case involving the Mescalero Apaches, the court viewed the clarification as a refusal "to extend the concept of concurrent federal and state jurisdiction to cases which arise in areas set aside by treaty for the exclusive use and control of Indians." Chino v. Chino, 90 N.M. 204, 561 P.2d 476, 478 (1977).

to regulate the conduct of trade and the use and disposition of tribal property upon the reservation." Mescalero Apache Tribe Revised Const. art. 11, § 1(c).[15] That constitution was adopted and approved pursuant to the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, 25 U.S.C. § 476, under which Congress provided that the adoption of a tribal constitution reconfirms in the tribe "all powers vested . . . by existing law." The statute thus reconfirms all preexisting powers of the Tribe and itself becomes a source of preempting power. See White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 48 U.S.L.W. 4897, 4899, 4899 n.10 (1980); Note, Balancing the Interests in Taxation of Non-Indian Activities on Indian Lands, 64 Iowa L. Rev. 1459, 1463, 1463 n.27 (1979).

Tribal power over reservation hunting and fishing was unquestionably vested prior to 1934. Tribal ordinances enacted to implement traditionally held, and congressionally approved, powers, may themselves serve to preempt the State. The Supreme Court saw another similarly enacted tribal ordinance as the implementation of "an overriding federal policy which is clearly adequate to defeat state jurisdiction." Fisher v. District Court, 424 U.S. 382, 390 (1976). Any constitutional limitations on congressional authority to delegate its legislative powers are "less stringent . . . where [as here] the entity exercising the delegated authority itself possesses independent authority over the subject matter." United States v. Mazurie, 419 U.S. 544, 556-57 (1975). The tribal scheme also negates any argument that the Tribe has not manifested an intent to preempt state jurisdiction. Cf. Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation v. Washington, 591 F.2d 89 (9th Cir. 1979).

---

[15] The constitution also provides that "[n]o provision . . . shall be construed as a limitation on the inherent residual sovereign powers of the Mescalero Apache Tribe." Mescalero Apache Tribe Revised Const. art. 27, § 1.

The Fourth Circuit has held that extensive federal participation in reservation wildlife development is itself an element indicating federal preemption. Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians v. North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission, 588 F.2d 75, 78 (4th Cir. 1978). In Eastern Band, as here, the federal government and the Tribe had developed the reservation fishing program with no state assistance. Where the State plays no role in stocking reservation waters, it "has no perceivable interest in reservation fishing." Id.[16] See White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 48 U.S.L.W. 4897, 4901 (1980). See also Central Machinery Co. v. Arizona State Tax Commission, 48 U.S.L.W. 4904 (1980).

Finally, we infer federal preemption from the statutory structure of Public Law 280, 67 Stat. 590 (1953), and its later amendments. Under that statute, New Mexico had the option until 1968 of unilaterally asserting civil and criminal jurisdiction over the Mescalero Apache reservation. It did not do so. See McClanahan v. Arizona State Tax Commission, 411 U.S. at 177-79. Even had the State assumed jurisdiction, the statute in its present form specifically protects the tribes from the deprivation of "any right, privilege, or immunity afforded under Federal treaty, agreement, or statute with respect to hunting, trapping, or fishing or the control, licensing, or regulating thereof." 25 U.S.C. § 1321(b). If those states which accepted Public Law 280 jurisdiction may not hinder traditional hunting and fishing rights, New Mexico a fortiori may not do so.

The presumption of federal preemption is clearly not overcome by a treaty and statutory scheme which reassert

---

[16] In Eastern Band, Chief Judge Haynsworth emphasized that the fishing program was a "purely commercial undertaking" of the Cherokees. 588 F.2d at 79. We believe that the tribal interests are, if anything, enhanced when the purposes of the wildlife regulation are much broader.

the exclusivity of federal and tribal regulation of hunting and fishing. The State may not apply its game laws to persons for acts done on the reservation.[17]

III. Tribal Self-Government

The second test for determining the propriety of state regulation on Indian reservations analyzes the impact of the regulation on tribal self-government. Even if the treaty and statutory scheme, read against the backdrop of sovereignty, were insufficient to create federal preemption, the Tribe's authority is here protected under a tribal self-government analysis.[18]

In the landmark case of Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217 (1959), which upheld tribal court jurisdiction over non-Indians, the Supreme Court restated the controlling test: "Essentially, absent governing Acts of Congress, the question has always been whether the state action infringed on the right of reservation Indians to make their own laws and be ruled by them." Id. at 220. To apply that test, a court must "[seek] an accomodation between the interests of the Tribes and the Federal Government, on the one hand, and those of the State, on the other." Washington v. Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian [17] Our analysis does not attach independent preemptive significance to 18 U.S.C. § 1165. Cf. Central Machinery Co. v. Arizona State Tax Commission, 48 U.S.L.W. 4904 (1980). The import of that statute is addressed in Part V.

[18] We recognize that the preemption and self-government analyses overlap, and that the Supreme Court appears to be gradually collapsing the tests into one. See Washington v. Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation, 48 U.S.L.W. 4668, 4673-74 (1980). Nonetheless, the two tests continue to provide different analytical perspectives. See White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 48 U.S.L.W. 4897, 4899 (1980).

Reservation, 48 U.S.L.W. 4668, 4674 (1980). Congress has identified one overriding federal interest by "recognizing the obligation of the United States to respond to the strong expression of the Indian people for self-determination." 25 U.S.C. § 450a(a).

In the context of its analysis of the pure-taxation schemes of the tribe and state in Colville, the Supreme Court delineated the relevant considerations for the balancing process:

> While the Tribes do have an interest in raising revenues for essential governmental programs, that interest is strongest when the revenues are derived from value generated on the reservation by activities involving the Tribes and when the taxpayer is the recipient of tribal services. The State also has a legitimate governmental interest in raising revenues, and that interest is likewise strongest when the tax is directed at off-reservation value and when the taxpayer is the recipient of state services.

48 U.S.L.W. at 4674. In the case before us, the scales tip decisively in the Tribe's favor.

Unlike Colville, we here have a clear state interference with a traditional tribal regulatory power. To restrict the application of the tribal scheme to members only would be to complicate excessively the enforcement process and to render the very idea of "regulation" an absurdity. Here the Tribe has, with the aid of the federal government, generated the "value . . . on the reservation" which it now seeks to control and whose benefits it seeks to enjoy. The state services received by on-reservation sportsmen are minimal—incidental spillover effects of state activities outside the reservation. In fact, the spillover benefits to the State from the tribal conservation scheme—e.g., development of the migratory elk herd—may well be more significant. Although New Mexico has a legitimate interest in the conservation of its wildlife, the Tribe's activities do not threaten that interest in any way.

The Ninth Circuit held, in United States v. Sanford, 547 F.2d 1085 (9th Cir. 1976), that Montana's elk hunting laws were applicable to non-Indians hunting on a tribal reservation. The court found no indication that Montana game laws interfered with tribal self-government. Id. at 1089. In distinguishing Sanford, the Fourth Circuit emphasized that "there was no showing in Sanford that the applicability of Montana's game laws . . . would materially affect or frustrate the Indians' governance of themselves or any commercial, conservationist or other program administered by the Indians for their own advantage." Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians v. North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission 588 F.2d 75, 78-79 (4th Cir. 1978). In this case, precisely that sort of showing was made.

Washington v. Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation, 48 U.S.L.W. 4668 (1980), indicates that state regulation of an activity in which a tribe has no significant interest—and where the only effect on the tribe is to limit tribal revenues—does not infringe upon tribal self-government. Id. at 4673-74. However, such an effect still remains a factor to be considered, for "financial self-sufficiency" is "one major goal of tribal self-government." Eastern Bank of Cherokee Indians v. North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission, 588 F.2d at 78. See also White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, 48 U.S.L.W. 4897, 4901 (1980). The unquestioned importance to the Tribe of the game revenues contributed to the district court's determination that tribal self-government was infringed upon, and we affirm that finding.

Finally, we note that underlying the infringement test is a desire to promote the development of indigenous Indian institutions. Congress has declared that its policy is "to help develop and utilize Indian resources . . . to a point where the Indians will fully exercise responsibility for the utilization and management of their own resources." 25 U.S.C § 1451. If we were to permit state interference with the tribal scheme, we would be effectively "deny[ing] Indians the opportunity of developing their own system." Chino v. Chino, 90 N.M. 204, 561 P.2d 476, 479 (1977). The federally declared policy of self-determination becomes a mockery if it is subject to defeasance by the State.

IV. Environmental Concerns

This nation has recently begun to recognize the fragility of the natural environment. However, the federal system, whose competing sovereignties serve to protect individual liberties, may not provide the optimum environmental regulatory scheme. The State suggests that, whatever the justification for exclusive tribal regulation under a traditional legal analysis, the seriousness of ecological problems creates an implied exception in this case. The State proclaims that "its management efforts are directed to biological rather than political units," Brief for Appellant at 27, so state regulation should be allowed.

The State vastly overstates its case. Just as wildlife does not respect reservation boundaries, it also does not respect the boundaries of states. The State surely does not mean to suggest that it ignores state boundaries in its enforcement efforts. Somewhat inconsistently, the State also maintains that, "[s]ince wildlife exists in widely varying conditions throughout the United States," "there is no dominant federal interest which requires preemption." Brief for Appellant at 55. The State's "biological units" argument would seem logically to prefer federal regulation, because only that regulation can take account of the varying conditions without the restraints of political boundaries. Hence, if ecological necessities were to require changes in constitutional arrangements—a position we certainly do not endorse—the changes would not necessarily be those suggested by the State.

In its ecological analysis, the State misinterprets Supreme Court language declaring the common law duty of a "state in its sovereign capacity" to protect wildlife "for the common benefit of all of its people." LaCoste v. Department of Conservation, 263 U.S. 545, 549 (1924). That language does not describe the ecologically optimum vehicle for regulation of wildlife. Nor does it require that only one sovereign, the State, participate in wildlife management. Instead, it is descriptive of the trusteeship duty imposed on all sovereigns. The Tribe as a sovereign has undertaken that duty, as the State concedes, in an exemplary fashion, vastly improving the wildlife habitat on the reservation. Therefore, the Ninth Circuit's reasoning in United States v. Montana, 604 F.2d 1162 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. granted, 48 U.S.L.W. 3661 (1980)—that simultaneous state regulation is permissible if the stated purpose is "conservation and proper management of game and fish," 604 F.2d at 1166—simply does not extend to this case. Based on the Tribe's record in wildlife management, we, unlike the Ninth Circuit, are not "convinced that the preservation and improvement of the stocks of fish and game," id. at 1170, requires dual regulation.

V. Enforcement

Our analysis has indicated that the Tribe has plenary power over reservation wildlife management. In this section we consider whether the absence of tribal criminal jurisdiction over non-members necessitates a cutback in that power.

New Mexico relies heavily on an enforcement vacuum that would allegedly exist if the State could not assert its criminal jurisdiction over the Indian reservation. The State insists that "[c]riminal jurisdiction over non-Indian hunters and fisherman [sic] is indispensable to effective management." Brief for Appellant at 36. Oliphant v. Suquamish Indian Tribe, 435 U.S. 191 (1978), effectively repudiated tribal criminal jurisdiction over non-members, and 18 U.S.C. § 1165,[19] it is argued, gives the United States jurisdiction over trespass only. Hence, the State maintains that without state criminal sanctions, violations by non-members would go unpunished and enforcement would be impossible. We believe New Mexico has overstated the effect of Oliphant and the need for criminal jurisdiction, and has underestimated the potential reach of § 1165.

New Mexico's interpretation of Oliphant would lead to the untenable conclusion that the Supreme Court implicitly abolished most aspects of tribal sovereignty, while at the same time asserting the continuing validity of that doctrine.[20] Many tribal powers that derive from inherent

---

[19] Section 1165, entitled "Hunting, trapping, or fishing on Indian land," reads:

> Whoever, without lawful authority or permission, willfully and knowingly goes upon any land that belongs to any Indian or Indian tribe, band, or group and either are held by the United States in trust or are subject to a restriction against alienation imposed by the United States, or upon any lands of the United States that are reserved for Indian use, for the purpose of hunting, trapping, or fishing thereon, or for the removal of game, peltries, or fish therefrom, shall be fined not more than $200 or imprisoned not more than ninety days, or both, and all game, fish, and peltries in his possession shall be forfeited.

[20] Recent Supreme Court reiterations of the continuing importance of tribal sovereignty are legion. See, e.g., Santa sovereignty would perhaps best be enforced through criminal sanctions. However, the Oliphant Court clearly did not intend to end all traditional tribal authority, including, for example, the taxing power—a power this court has recently reaffirmed. See Merrion v. Jicarilla Apache Tribe, 617 F.2d 537 (10th Cir. 1980)(en banc). In fact, the Supreme Court has recognized the limited nature of the Oliphant holding. See Washington v. Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation, 48 U.S.L.W. 4668, 4673 (1980).

(footnote continues)

Many regulatory schemes, at all levels of government, exist without criminal sanctions for enforcement purposes. New Mexico itself relies in part on civil sanctions in its hunting and fishing enforcement scheme. See, e.g., N.M. Stat. Ann. § 17-2-26 (1978). Although the Tribe may not assert criminal jurisdiction over non-members, the Supreme Court has at no time denied the power of an Indian tribe to assert its civil powers. For example, "[t]ribal courts have repeatedly been recognized as appropriate forums for the exclusive adjudication of disputes affecting important personal and property interests of both Indians and non-Indians." Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez, 436 U.S. 49, 65 (1978). See also Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217 (1959). There is no inconsistency in the existence of tribal regulatory power without the availability of criminal sanctions. Cf. United States v. Montana, 604 F.2d 1162, 1165 (9th Cir. 1979), cert. granted, 48 U.S.L.W. 3661 (1980). Included in the Tribe's unquestioned authority is the power to expel those who violate tribal ordinances on the reservation. See Quechan Tribe of Indians v. Rowe, 531 F.2d 408, 411 (9th Cir. 1976).

(footnote continued)

Clara Pueblo v. Martinez 436 U.S. 49, 55-56 (1978); United States v. Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313, 322-28 (1978); Oliphant v. Suquamish Indian Tribe, 435 U.S. 191, 208 (1978); United States v. Antelope, 430 U.S. 641, 646 (1977); United States v. Mazurie, 419 U.S. 544, 557 (1975).

We reject the State's assertion that we must imply a divestiture of tribal sovereignty in any area in which the Tribe becomes involved with non-members. The Supreme Court has noted that "[t]he areas in which . . . implicit divestiture of sovereignty has been held to have occurred are those involving the relations between an Indian tribe and nonmembers of the tribe," United States v. Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313, 326 (1978), but the Court did not mean that sovereignty has necessarily been divested whenever a tribe's external relations are involved. The divestiture found in Oliphant is of a very special sort, and "[i]n most respects the Oliphant Court's rationale does not apply to noncriminal cases." Collins, Implied Limitations on the Jurisdiction of Indian Tribes, 54 Wash. L. Rev. 479, 508 (1979). See Note, Balancing the Interests in Taxation of Non-Indian Activities on Indian Lands, 64 Iowa L. Rev. 1459, 1467-69 (1979).

Even if tribal civil sanctions are not sufficient to provide efficient wildlife regulation, the criminal authority of the United States under 18 U.S.C. § 1165 could be interpreted broadly enough to fill much of any enforcement vacuum. When a non-member violates, for example, a tribal bag limit, he can be considered to have gone upon tribal land "without lawful authority or permission." His permission to enter was conditioned upon his observance of tribal game regulations.[21] The scienter element of the statute does not require for conviction that the offender [21] This interpretation of § 1165 may differ in spirit from that of the Ninth Circuit: "[S]ection 1165 must be considered to be a statute providing a penalty for trespass to an Indian reservation and not an attempt by Congress to enter the field of fish and game regulation." United States v. Sanford, 547 F.2d 1085, 1089 (9th Cir. 1976) (quoting State v. Danielson, 427 P.2d 689, 691 (Mont. 1967)). However, we do not believe that it differs in substantive result. It is sufficient for purposes of providing an enforcement mechanism that § 1165 be read merely as an anti-trespass statute.

intended to violate tribal lawful authority when he entered the land. The requirement is only that he "knowingly goes upon any land . . . for the purpose of hunting, trapping, or fishing thereon." If the statute does leave an enforcement vacuum, it would be for that very limited class which enters the reservation with no intent to participate in hunting, trapping or fishing and then violates the tribal game ordinances.

VI. Effect of Injunction

We must address one final question, an alleged lack of clarity in the district court's order. That ambiguity reflects, it is argued, the application of improper standards in granting injunctive relief. The State suggests that the district court's injunction provides incomplete relief to the Tribe because it expressly governs only "acts done on the Reservation" and does not address the State's claimed power to regulate possession of game off the reservation. Brief for Appellant at 23-24.

No dilemma exists. The simple answer is that, absent justification, the State may not discriminatorily prohibit possession of game lawfully obtained from the reservation while permitting possession of game obtained elsewhere. See N.M. Stat. Ann. § 17-2-7A(2) (1978). A proper game license from another state is presumably a defense to a New Mexico prosecution for possession of game without a New Mexico license. The same principle applies to game obtained on the reservation with a proper tribal license. Unless New Mexico is willing to prohibit possession of game altogether, it may not prohibit possession of game legally obtained from a source outside the State's jurisdiction. The Supreme Court has recently stressed that a state's historic interest in protection of wild animals, see Geer v. Connecticut, 161 U.S. 519 (1896), does not extend to the "ownership of game that had been lawfully reduced to possession." Hughes v. Oklahoma, 441 U.S. 322, 327 (1979).

The district court's injunctive order properly protected its declaratory judgment.

AFFIRMED.

No. 78-1790—Mescalero Apache Tribe v. State of New Mexico

BREITENSTEIN, Circuit Judge, concurring in the result.

I concur in the result. In my opinion New Mexico may not enforce its fishing and hunting laws on the Mescalero Apache Reservation. The Tribe has the right of self-government. See Joe v. Marcum, 10 Cir., ____F.2d____, Nos. 78-1912 and 78-1932, opinion filed May 16, 1980. The control which the Tribe has exercised over fishing and hunting is reasonable. The Supreme Court has long been solicitous in its protection of the fishing and hunting rights of Indians. Cheyenne-Arapaho Tribes v. State of Oklahoma, 10 Cir., 618 F.2d 665, 669. Dual Tribe and State control may be appropriate as an aid in the conservation of fish and game. Id. at 667. The instant record shows no need for joint conservation measures. The right of the State to regulate off-reservation possession of game lawfully reduced to possession in accordance with Tribal law is foreclosed by Hughes v. Oklahoma, 441 U.S. 322, 327, 335-336.

IN THE

United States District Court

FOR THE DISTRICT OF NEW MEXICO

MESCALERO APACHE TRIBE,
Plaintiff,

v.

No. 77-395-M
Civil

STATE OF NEW MEXICO and
WILLIAM S. HUEY, Individually
and as Director of the New Mexico Department of Game
and Fish, or his Successors
in Office,

Defendants.

JUDGMENT AND INJUNCTION

This case having come on for non-jury trial, the evidence having been heard and the arguments considered, a memorandum opinion has been entered which constitutes the findings of fact and conclusions of law; and having found the issues in favor of the plaintiff and having concluded that the plaintiff has made the requisite showing for issuance of an injunction against the defendants; Now, Therefore,

IT IS ORDERED that judgment is hereby entered against the defendants, and in favor of the plaintiff, the Mescalero Apache Tribe; and the hunting and fishing laws and regulations of the State of New Mexico are hereby declared inapplicable to any person, Indian or non-Indian, hunting or fishing within the exterior boundaries of the Mescalero Apache Reservation and jurisdiction to regulate hunting and fishing within the Mescalero Apache Reservation is hereby declared to rest with the Mescalero Apache Tribe and the United States to the exclusion of the defendant the State of New Mexico; and

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that the defendants or their agents are permanently enjoined from enforcing New Mexico hunting and fishing laws and regulations against any person either on the Reservation or after they have left the Reservation for acts done on the Reservation.

.....

United States District Judge

IN THE

United States District Court

FOR THE DISTRICT OF NEW MEXICO

MESCALERO APACHE TRIBE,
Plaintiff,

v.

No. 77-395-M
Civil

STATE OF NEW MEXICO and
WILLIAM S. HUEY, Individually
and as Director of the New Mexico Department of Game
and Fish, or his Successors
in Office,

Defendants.

MEMORANDUM OPINION

The plaintiff, the Mescalero Apache Tribe, brought this action against the State of New Mexico for declaratory and injunctive relief. The plaintiff contends that the United States has authorized the Mescalero Apache Tribe exclusively to manage and to regulate the hunting and fishing resources on the Mescalero Apache Reservation and that the State of New Mexico is unlawfully infringing upon this exclusive jurisdiction, thereby violating the Tribe's right of self-government. The plaintiff seeks a judgment that New Mexico's hunting and fishing laws and regulations are inapplicable to any person, Indian or non-Indian, hunting or fishing within the exterior boundaries of the plaintiff's Reservation and that jurisdiction to regulate hunting and fishing within the Mescalero Apache Reservation rests with the Mescalero Apache Tribe and the United States to the exclusion of the defendant. The plaintiff also seeks to permanently enjoin the defendant State from enforcing its hunting and fishing laws and regulations against any person, either on the Reservation or after they have left it, for acts done on the Reservation. The following will constitute my findings of fact and conclusions of law. I conclude in favor of the plaintiff.

The plaintiff invokes federal jurisdiction pursuant to 28 USC 1331 and 28 USC 1362. Jurisdiction is present. The defendant raises the issues of ripeness and standing. The defendant, in addition, argues that the United States and the Secretary of the Interior are indispensable parties to the plaintiff's action. There is no basis to these contentions.

A justiciable controversy exists here. Even though one hunting season has ended, another is imminent. State enforcement of its laws and regulations against persons hunting and fishing on the plaintiff's Reservation persists. In the defendant's proposed findings of fact, the defendant states: "The State of New Mexico has enforced and intends to continue to enforce its hunting and fishing laws and regulations against non-Indians hunting and fishing on Indian lands, including the Mescalero Apache Reservation." The case is not moot and the plaintiff has standing to litigate. The plaintiff alleges injury in fact and an interest within that zone of interests protected by the constitutional guarantee in question. See: Assoc. of Data Processing Service Organizations, Inc. v. Camp, 397 U.S. 150 (1970).

A determination that New Mexico game laws are not applicable to non-Indian activity within the Mescalero Apache Reservation cannot injuriously affect the interests of the United States and the plaintiff has a legal right to bring this action in its own behalf. Neither will a determination in this cause affect the Secretary of the Interior; no act would be required of the Secretary regardless of the outcome of the suit. The defendant's contentions regarding indispensable parties, therefore, are without basis.

The parties have stipulated that the Mescalero Apache Tribe is a federally recognized Indian Tribe governed by its revised constitution of January 12, 1965, which was adopted pursuant to 25 USC 476. The governing body of the Mescalero Apache Tribe is duly recognized by the United States Secretary of Interior. The Tribe signed a treaty with the United States on July 1, 1852, which submitted the Tribe and its members to the laws, jurisdiction, and government of the United States of America. Article 9 of the Treaty provided that the United States government would designate, settle and adjust the boundaries of the Mescalero Apache lands. The Reservation of the Mescalero Apache Tribe was originally created by a Presidential Order in 1873, was modified by subsequent Executive Orders, and was established as it presently exists by an Executive Order dated March 24, 1883. The Reservation is located entirely within the State of New Mexico in the aboriginal territory of the Mescalero Apache.

Over the past several years the Mescalero Apache Tribe has developed an extensive tourism program designed to bring income and employment to the Reservation. As a part of that program and in order to better manage and control its wildlife resources the Tribe, pursuant to its constitution, has adopted hunting and fishing ordinances requiring tribal licenses, setting bag limits, and establishing programs and seasons for hunting and fishing on the Reservation. The Tribe's 1977 ordinances were duly approved by the Secretary of Interior. The Tribe benefits economically from hunting and fishing revenues. Fees from tribal licenses provide individual tribal members a wide range of governmental and social services. The Tribe employs seven full-time conservation officers who assist a Bureau of Indian Affairs range conservationist with game management, aerial surveys, and pellet group transect studies to determine the deer, elk, antelope and bear populations on the Reservation.

In 1966 and 1967 the National Park Service donated an elk herd to be released on the Mescalero Apache Reservation. At that time it was estimated the elk in the general area of the Reservation numbered 13; the herd imported from Wyoming numbered 162. Although the antelope population on the Reservation is non-migratory, the elk range freely on and off the Mescalero Apache Reservation throughout the year. Since elk were planted in 1966, however, the Tribe has placed several wells in areas previously unable to support cattle because of absence of water. This considerable amount of range development has removed cattle from direct competition with elk in the higher parts of the Reservation. The Reservation is well suited to support elk as well as other game and the elk population in the area is now estimated at 1200.

The Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, Department of the Interior, operates a National Fish Hatchery on the Reservation and provides technical assistance in the management and development of fishery resources in Reservation waters. There are no natural lakes within the boundaries of the Reservation. Several man-made lakes have been constructed with federal funds and are stocked from the National Fish Hatchery.

Within the boundaries of the Mescalero Apache Reservation the State of New Mexico, in the last eight years, has not selected or improved any land or water areas as adaptable for wildlife feeding, resting or breeding places. The State has not adopted nor formulated any plans for restocking lakes and streams with fish, has not conducted research into problems of fish management or administration of fish resources, and has undertaken no wildlife restoration projects. In short, the Tribe conducts its complete fish and game management program exclusive of the State of New Mexico.

The State, nevertheless, has been actively prosecuting non-Indians for violation of New Mexico hunting and fishing laws for acts committed within Reservation limits that did not violate tribal law. Section 53-2-31 N.M.S.A. 1953 Comp. states that the hunting and fishing laws of the State are applicable to "... all Indians off the reservation within the state or coming into the state from adjoining states, and to all persons hunting on any Indian reservation within the state..." except that no Indian is required to have a license to hunt or fish within the limits of the reservation where he resides. This conflicts with the law of the Tribe. Mescalero Apache Tribal Ordinance 77-1 provides: "No state license of any kind shall be necessary for any person." Other conflicts between State and Tribal regulations exist with regard to bag limits, fishing licenses, hunter training course requirements, and season dates. New Mexico 1978 Big Game Proclamation begins the antelope season on August 29, 1978; Tribal Ordinance 78-3 begins the antelope season on the Reservation on August 28, 1978. The State's hunting proclamation prohibits anyone who held an elk license in 1977 from applying again in 1978. The Tribe has no such restriction. The same New Mexico prohibition applies to antelope licenses, but the Tribe has no such restriction. Thus the present suit arises.

"As a basic proposition it is clear that Indians traditionally enjoyed the exclusive right to hunt and fish on lands reserved to them, unless such rights were clearly relinquished by treaty." Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation v. State of Washington, 412 F. Supp. 651, 654 (1976). See also: Menominee Tribe v. United States, 391 U.S. 404 (1968). Thus before the Mescalero

Apache Tribe signed the Treaty of July 1, 1852, it had inherent and complete authority to control the fish and game found within the confines of the tribal territory. This right was part of the Indians' "larger rights" and was "not much less necessary to the existence of the Indians than the atmosphere they breathed." United States v. Winans, 198 U.S. 371, 381 (1905). It was not surrendered by the Treaty of July 1, 1852. Even though the Treaty is silent as to hunting and fishing rights, it must be viewed as "not a grant of rights to the Indians, but a grant of rights from them—a reservation of those not granted." Id. A tribe reserves its right to control hunting and fishing in the area in which it resides whether or not such right is specifically mentioned in a treaty. Menominee Tribe v. United States, supra. Whether the reservation on which the right is to be exercised is created by Executive Order or by treaty makes no difference. Antoine v. Washington, 420 U.S. 194 (1975). A treaty is to be construed liberally and not to the prejudice of the Indians. United States v. Winans, supra. Antoine v. Washington, supra. McClanahan v. Ariz. State Tax Commission, 411 U.S. 164 (1973).

Aboriginal possession "creates a possessory right legally enforceable against everyone except the United States." United States v. Santa Fe Pacific Railroad Co., 314 U.S. 339, 342 (1941). United States v. Tillamooks, 329 U.S. 40 (1946). Such right can be limited or abolished only by the United States. Worchester v. Georgia, 31 U.S. (6 Pet.) 515 (1832). United States v. Mazurie, 419 U.S. 544 (1975). Wilkinson and Volkman, "Judicial Review of Indian Treaty Abrogation: 'As Long As Water Flows, or Grass Grows Upon the Earth'—How Long a Time Is That?", 63 Calif. Law Rev. 601 (1975). No Presidential act and no federal legislation since 1852 has abrogated either the Treaty of July 1, 1852 or the Mescalero Apache Tribe's right to control hunting and fishing on its Reservation.

Whether the test for finding an abrogation of treaty rights is "a clear showing of legislative intent", "not lightly implied" or "express legislative reference" need not be decided. By any of these measures the Mescalero Apache Tribe has not lost its hunting and fishing rights.

This conclusion is reinforced by specific federal legislation, including 18 USC 1165. See: S. Rep. 1686, 86th Cong. 2d Sess. (1960). Section 1165 makes it a crime to go upon Indian lands for the purpose of hunting, trapping or fishing without permission of the tribe. The tribe decides who may and who may not hunt and fish within its reservation. This power is confirmed, as well, in the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, 25 USC 461 et seq. Title 25 USC 1321, the successor to Public Law 280, gives some states limited jurisdiction over specified Indian affairs, but exempts "any right, privilege or immunity afforded under Federal treaty, agreement, or statute with respect to hunting, trapping or fishing or the control, licensing or regulating thereof." Public Law 280 is not applicable in New Mexico. Its language and that of Section 1321 (b), however, indicate a congressional policy to allow all Indian tribes self-government in specific areas including fish and game regulation and, in those states such as New Mexico which are not Public Law 280 states, to allow tribes self-government in other matters as well. Hence, in addition to aboriginal and treaty rights, Congress has clearly allowed Indian tribes, including the Mescalero, continued powers over reservation hunting and fishing.

Does this right exist in the tribe exclusively? The recent case of White Mountain Apache Tribe v. State of Arizona, No. 77-867 Civ., D. Ct. Ariz., Decided June 13, 1978, holds that it does not. Predicated on dual state-tribal jurisdiction over Indian lands and lack of specific legislative authority delegating to the White Mountain Apache Tribe power to preempt state fish and game laws, the case concludes in favor of the State because "the overlapping jurisdiction of state and tribal law to non-Indian on-reservation hunting and fishing does not significantly infringe on a legitimate tribal interest in self-government."

The Court in White Mountain Apache finds that United States ownership of land within a state's boundaries does not withdraw the land from the jurisdiction of the state. I find, likewise, that the State of New Mexico has jurisdiction over some federal lands within its boundaries. But as to state jurisdiction there exists not one, but several different situations. Little similarity exists, for example, between the exercise of state jurisdiction on national forest lands and the exercise of state jurisdiction on military reservations. Federal jurisdiction over public lands "may range from exclusive federal jurisdiction with no residual state police power (cites omitted), to concurrent, or partial, federal legislative jurisdiction which may allow the State to exercise certain authority." Kleppe v. State of New Mexico, 426 U.S. 529, 542 (1976). Land owned by the United States cannot be considered as if it were of one kind only. To find, as the Court in White Mountain Apache does, that states have concurrent jurisdiction over all federal land within their boundaries is not consistent with the law I read on the subject. Such a general conclusion neglects to consider what is essential to the question of jurisdiction in Indian country: the Commerce Clause and the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution and a long line of federal Indian cases beginning with Worcester v. Georgia, supra.

The Constitution, Article I, Section 8, gives the Federal government plenary power "to regulate Commerce with foreign Nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes." Worcester v. Georgia, supra, examined the Commerce Clause and the basic relationships among tribal, state and federal governments. Worcester held that the Constitution gives to the federal government plenary power to regulate Indian affairs and that, because Indian territory is territory distinct from that of a state, state laws do not apply within its boundaries. In one of many passages that remain a basis of contemporary Indian law, Worcester speaks of "the universal conviction that the Indian nations possessed a full right to the lands they occupied, until that right should be extinguished by the United States, with their consent; that their territory was separated from that of any State, within whose chartered limits they might reside, by a boundary line, established by treaties; that the whole power of regulating the intercourse with them was vested in the United States." 8 Law. Ed. at 501.

No doubt Worcester v. Georgia has been modified. Oliphant v. Suquamish Indian Tribe, U.S. Supr. Ct. Slip Op. No. 76-5729, Decided March 6, 1978, qualified the scope of tribal powers by limiting tribal criminal jurisdiction. Yet the broad principles of Worcester, that the federal government has plenary authority in the regulation of Indian affairs and that Indian people are sovereign nations apart from the states, stand. Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217, 219 (1959). "The sovereignty that the Indian tribes retain is of a unique and limited character. It exists only at the sufferance of Congress and is subject to complete defeasance. But until Congress acts, the tribes still possess those aspects of sovereignty not withdrawn by treaty or statute, or by implication as a necessary result of their dependent status." United States v. Wheeler, U.S. Supr. Ct. Slip Op. No. 76-1629, Decided March 22, 1978. See also: McClanahan v. Arizona State Tax Commission, supra.

The Court in White Mountain Apache v. State of Arizona, supra, purports to find, first, state authority to extend its police powers to affairs on Indian reservations, and then looks for legislative authority permitting the Indian tribe to preempt this state law. I take a different approach. I conclude from the Constitution, the Treaty of July 1, 1852, and the case law that authority to regulate on the Mescalero Apache Reservation, or on any Indian reservation, rests entirely in the federal government and, although Congress can relinquish to the several states aspects of its jurisdiction over Indian affairs, the intent of Congress to give up any part of such authority must be clear. Ex Parte Crow Dog, 109 U.S. 556 (1883). Bryan v. Itasca County, 426 U.S. 373 (1976). It is legislation giving New Mexico authority to regulate on the Mescalero Apache Reservation that I must look for but do not find.

The defendant argues that because the State of New Mexico receives federal matching funds under the Pittman-Robertson Act, for wildlife management, and the Dingle-Johnson Act, for fish management, calculated by a method that includes the land area of the Mescalero Apache Reservation, Congress must be intending that the State of New Mexico exercise jurisdiction over the Reservation. The legislation in question does not meet the test of clear legislative intent. "Certain state laws have been permitted to apply to activities on Indian reservations where those laws are specifically authorized by Acts of Congress, or where they clearly do not interfere with federal policies concerning the reservations." Warren Trading Post Co. v. Ariz. Tax Commission, 380 U.S. 685, 687 (1965), emphasis added. The legislation cited by the defendant simply employs a formula adaptable to dissimilar situations, including those where an Indian reservation consents to a State's wildlife management scheme. In the instant case the Mescalero Apache Tribe conducts its own management program and enforces its own regulations; and the federal legislation in question is insufficient by itself to give the State of New Mexico authority to intervene.

I am not saying that it is 18 USC 1165 that prevents the defendant here, the State of New Mexico, from interfering with tribal fish and game regulation on the Mescalero Apache Reservation. In the case of United States v. Sanford, 547 F2d 1085 (9th C. 1976), the Court reasoned that 18 USC 1165 did not constitute an attempt by Congress to enter the field of fish and game regulation. The Sanford case held that Montana fish and game laws did apply on the Crow Indian Reservation. But the Sanford case and the present one differ significantly. I find with the Mescalero Apache Tribe a comprehensive fish and game policy together with an adequate and enforceable set of tribal ordinances. United States v. Sanford, supra, did not reach the question presented by the facts in the present case. In the absence of tribal ordinances, no law of the Crow Reservation conflicted with Montana law. In the absence of federal action regarding hunting and fishing on the Crow Reservation, Montana law could not be said to interfere with federal policies. Thus, despite specific authority, in the lack of conflict state law could be permitted to apply on the Reservation. I note, however, that the Court in Sanford stated: "We express no opinion concerning the possible concurrent application of tribal law to non-Indians on Indian reservations under the circumstances of this case", 547 F2d at 1089.

Reading United States v. Sanford with United States v. Finch, 548 F.2d 835 (9th C. 1977), I understand the Ninth Circuit to recognize those same Indian rights I have discussed and to consider 18 USC 1165 for the same purposes for which I have considered it. As the Court said in Finch, "The language and the history of 18 USC 1165 show that the right of Indians to control hunting, trapping and fishing on their lands is a prerogative of ownership which the United States recognizes as a matter of federal law." 548 F.2d at 834.

What I do believe prevents the exercise of state fish and game jurisdiction on the Mescalero Apache Reservation is federal preemption of the field. On July 1, 1852, the Mescalero Apache Tribe, in Article One of the Treaty, placed itself "exclusively under the laws, jurisdiction, and government of the United States." The New Mexico Enabling Act, 36 Stat. 557 (1910) states:

> All right and title . . . to all lands lying within said boundaries owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribes the right or title which shall have been acquired through or from the United States or any prior sovereignty, and that until the title of such Indian or Indian tribes shall have been extinguished the same shall be and remain subject to the disposition and under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States.

The defendant maintains that absolute jurisdiction is not exclusive jurisdiction. Because of the Supremacy Clause of the United States Constitution, however, even in a field where a state might legislate, or where state law could be applied absent federal law in the area, a state's power is subordinate to federal law. Once Congress has chosen to adopt a comprehensive, integrated scheme of regulation in a given area, state action is precluded. Hines v. Davidowitz, 312 U.S. 52 (1940). Warren Trading Post Co. v. Arizona Tax Commission, supra.

White Mountain Apache Tribe v. State of Arizona, supra, rejected the preemption argument and used an infringement test analysis. The infringement test is clearly set out in Williams v. Lee, supra: "Essentially, absent governing Acts of Congress, the question has always been whether the state action infringed on the right of reservation Indians to make their own laws and be ruled by them." 358 U.S. at 220. The infringement test is coupled in Williams v. Lee with the preemption doctrine, that is "absent governing Acts of Congress." Subsequent cases have never used the infringement test by itself; it is a concomitant consideration. Kennerly v. District Court of Montana, 400 U.S. 423 (1971).

I understand that New Mexico's hunting and fishing laws are not enforced against members of the Mescalero Apache Tribe on their own Reservation and that no State officers go on the Mescalero Apache Reservation to enforce against non-Indians. Notwithstanding New Mexico's present enforcement policies, the Mescalero Apache Tribe is fully able to govern its own members. On the other hand, revenues from tribal hunting and fishing licenses greatly benefit the Mescalero Apache Tribe. The Tribe owns and operates a large hotel on its Reservation. Tourism is a major source of tribal income and revenues from tourists attracted by fishing and hunting on the Reservation contribute substantially to the Tribe's financial welfare. These facts are substantially the same as those in Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians v. State of North Carolina Department of Natural and Economic Resources, Civ. No. BC-C76-65, D. Ct. W.D. No. Carol., Decided August 27, 1976. In Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, the United States, as in this case, had provided financial and technical assistance to a tribal wildlife program; the Tribe had enacted extensive regulations regarding hunting and fishing on the Reservation; the Tribe had a well-developed tourism program; and enforcement of the state's hunting and fishing laws, even as against non-Indians only, had a direct impact upon the revenues of the Tribe. Infringement was not the test relied on, however; the Court based its holding on preemption. "This Court finds and concludes that the federal government has assumed comprehensive supervision and management of trout fishing on the Reservation and has thereby preempted this field, and has delegated its regulatory power to the plaintiff, Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians. It therefore follows that the State has no authority to levy and collect the fishing license fee." Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, supra, cf. Confederated Tribe of the Colville Indian Reservation v. State of Washington, supra. Whether or not the defendant's actions in the present case, then, infringe on the self-government of the Mescalero Apache Tribe is not the principle consideration.

Confederated Tribes of the Colville Indian Reservation v. State of Washington is another case similar in facts to the one at hand. The Colville Indian Reservation was established by Executive Order on July 2, 1972. The Colville Indians have developed a program of sport fishing and tourism on the reservation and have been supported by the financial and technical assistance of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service. The Tribes have a set of fishing ordinances and regulations requiring tribal licenses but not a license from the State of Washington. When the State attempted to enforce its license requirement on non-Indians fishing within the boundaries of the Colville Reservation, the Tribes brought suit. The Court concluded that the Indians had fishing and hunting rights not relinquished by treaty, that although some tribal jurisdiction had been taken from the Tribes and given to the State of Washington by express provisions of Public Law 280, the Colville Indians had retained their jurisdiction over hunting and fishing, and that "Since plaintiff (tribes) has enacted a comprehensive program for the administration of tribal fisheries resources as authorized by the proviso of Section 1162(b), any state infringement of the tribes' exercise of this regulatory power would violate the Supremacy Clause." 412 F.Supp at 655. "Further, the exercise of such delegated powers has the same force and effect under the Supremacy Clause as if exercised by the federal government directly." Id.

United States v. Mazurie, supra, dealt with the delegation of Congressional authority to an Indian tribe. The Wind River Tribes in Wyoming had adopted an ordinance which permitted liquor sales on the reservation, but which, in 1971, was amended to require both a state and a tribal license. In 1972, Mazurie applied for a tribal license and the license was denied. Mazurie continued his liquor sales without a tribal license until federal officers seized the alcoholic beverages and a criminal prosecution was initiated. The tribal court entered judgments of conviction; the Court of Appeals reversed on the grounds that the prosecution had failed to prove the bar was not excluded from "Indian country" under the exception for fee-patented lands and that the tribal ordinance was an invalid delegation of Congressional authority. The Supreme Court held, as to the second ground, that the delegation of federal authority to the Indian tribe was proper. The Court stated at 556-557:

> This Court has recognized limits on the authority of Congress to delegate its legislative power. (Cite omitted.) Those limitations are, however, less stringent in cases where the entity exercising the delegated authority itself possesses independent authority over the subject matter. (Cite omitted.) Thus it is an important aspect of this case that Indian tribes are unique aggregations possessing attributes of Sovereignty over both their members and their territory, Worcester v. Georgia, 6 Pet. 515, 557 (1832); they are "a separate people" possessing "the power of regulating their internal and social relations . . . ," United States v. Kagama, 118 U.S. 375, 381-382 (1886); McClanahan v. Arizona State Tax Comm'n, 411 U.S. 164, 173 (1973).

The fish and game ordinances and regulations of the Mescalero Apache Tribe, therefore, authorized and sanctioned by the federal government and accompanied by active federal support of the fish and game program on the Mescalero Reservation, provide the integrated scheme that results in the federal preemption of fish and game law on the Mescalero Apache Reservation. The United States had acted in the exercise of its fiduciary duty to an Indian tribe. It has, additionally, permitted tribal regulations reaching non-Indians that, had it wanted, the federal government itself could have enacted. As stated in Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians, supra:

> . . . these governmental acts, under congressional authority and approval, relate to the exercise of guardianship and protection over the Eastern Band and . . . such acts reasonably relate to the Tribe's economic welfare. It is a valid governmental function consistent with its fiduciary relationship with the Tribe, and under the facts of this case, preempt the State's regulation. It follows that the United States, in conjunction with the Eastern Band, is entitled to regulate and maintain the fish management program on the Cherokee Reservation with the interference of the State.

Coupled with the federal policy of Indian self-determination, all of these considerations lead me to the conclusion that the combined actions of the United States and the Mescalero Apache Tribe establish in the United States and the Mescalero Apache Tribe an exclusive jurisdiction over hunting and fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation and prevent the State of New Mexico from enforcing its fish and game laws and regulations against any person, Indian or non-Indian, for acts committed within the boundaries of the Reservation.

The record indicates that the defendants or their agents might continue enforcement of New Mexico hunting and fishing laws against persons hunting and fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation and that if this occurred the plaintiff would suffer irreparable harm and stand without a remedy at law. I conclude that a permanent injunction against the defendant is warranted. A judgment and injunction will be entered consistent with this opinion.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE

Treaty With The Apaches, July 1, 1852, 10 Stat. 979 (1852)

Article 1. Said nation or tribe of Indians through their authorized Chiefs aforesaid do hereby acknowledge and declare that they are lawfully and exclusively under the laws, jurisdiction, and government of the United States of America, and to its power they do hereby submit.

Article 9. Relying confidently upon the justice and the liberality of the aforesaid government, and anxious to remove every possible cause that might disturb their peace and quiet, it is agreed by the aforesaid Apache's [sic] that the government of the United States shall at its earliest convenience designate, settle, and adjust their territorial boundaries, and pass and execute in their territory such laws as may be deemed conducive to the prosperity and happiness of said Indians.

The New Mexico Enabling Act, 36 Stat. 557 (1910)

All right and title . . . to all lands lying within said boundaries owned or held by any Indian or Indian tribes the right or title which shall have been acquired through or from the United States or any prior sovereignty, and that until the title of such Indian or Indian tribes shall have been extinguished the same shall be and remain subject to the disposition and under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States.

Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, 25 U.S.C. § 476

§ 476. Organization of Indian tribes; constitution and bylaws; special election

Any Indian tribe, or tribes, residing on the same reservation, shall have the right to organize for its common welfare, and may adopt an appropriate constitution and bylaws, which shall become effective when ratified by a majority vote of the adult members of the tribe, or of the adult Indians residing on such reservation, as the case may be, at a special election authorized and called by the Secretary of the Interior under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe. Such constitution and bylaws, when ratified as aforesaid and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be revokable by an election open to the same voters and conducted in the same manner as hereinabove provided. Amendments to the constitution and bylaws may be ratified and approved by the Secretary in the same manner as the original constitution and bylaws.

In addition to all powers vested in any Indian tribe or tribal council by existing law, the constitution adopted by said tribe shall also vest in such tribe or its tribal council the following rights and powers: To employ legal counsel, the choice of counsel and fixing of fees to be subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior; to prevent the sale, disposition, lease, or encumbrance of tribal lands, interests in lands, or other tribal assets without the consent of the tribe; and to negotiate with the Federal, State, and local Governments. The Secretary of the Interior shall advise such tribe or its tribal council of all appropriation estimates or Federal projects for the benefit of the tribe prior to the submission of such estimates to the Office of Management and Budget and the Congress.

Public Law 83-280, as amended, 18 U.S.C. § 1162(b)

(b) Nothing in this section shall authorize the alienation, encumbrance, or taxation of any real or personal property, including water rights, belonging to any Indian or any Indian tribe, band, or community that is held in trust by the United States or is subject to a restriction against alienation imposed by the United States; or shall authorize regulation of the use of such property in a manner inconsistent with any Federal treaty, agreement, or statute or with any regulation made pursuant thereto; or shall deprive any Indian or any Indian tribe, band, or community of any right, privilege, or immunity afforded under Federal treaty, agreement, or statute with respect to hunting, trapping, or fishing or the control, licensing, or regulation thereof.

DEC 22 1980
MICHAEL RODAK, JR., CLERK

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1980

No. 80-778

STATE OF NEW MEXICO AND HAROLD F. OLSON,
Individually and as Director, New Mexico
Department of Game and Fish,
Petitioners,

v.

THE MESCALERO APACHE TRIBE,
Respondent.

BRIEF IN OPPOSITION TO PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE TENTH CIRCUIT

George E. Fettinger
P.O. Drawer M
Alamogordo, New Mexico 88310

Attorney for Respondent

Of Counsel:

Kim Jerome Gottschalk
Norman D. Bloom, Jr.
Fettinger & Bloom
P.O. Drawer M
Alamogordo, New Mexico 88310

INDEX

STATEMENT OF THE CASE page

I. The Decision of the Tenth Circuit Does Not Conflict With the Decision of Any Circuit Court of Appeals..... 4

II. The Tenth Circuit's Concept of Tribal Sovereignty Is in Line With Decisions of This Court..... 6

III. The Tenth Circuit's Conclusion That Federal Law Preempts State Jurisdiction Over Hunting and Fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation Is Sound and Should Not Be Reviewed..... 8

IV. Application of New Mexico's Hunting and Fishing Laws on the Mescalero Apache Reservation Would Seriously Infringe on Tribal Self-Government Contrary to the Principle of Williams v. Lee..... 11

CONCLUSION 13

APPENDIX page

Stipulation 1a

CITATIONS

Cases: page

Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians v. North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission, 588 F.2d 75 (4th Cir. 1978), Petition for Writ of Certiorari voluntarily dismissed, 48 U.S.L.W. 3786 (May 22, 1980)..... 4,6-10

Fisher v. District Court, 424 U.S. 382, 390 (1976).....10

Mescalero Apache Tribe v. O'Cheskey, 625 F.2d 967 (10th Cir. 1980) reh. denied, August 25, 1980, cert. applied for November 20, 1980. 9

Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez, 436 U.S. 49 (1978).... 7

United States v. Mazurie, 419 U.S. 544, 556-557 (1975).....10

United States v. State of Montana, 604 F.2d 1162 (9th Cir. 1979) cert. granted, No. 79-1128, 48 U.S.L.W. 3661 (April 14, 1980).....4,6

United States v. Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313 (1978).....7

United States v. Winans, 198 U.S. 371, 381 (1904).....8

Washington v. Confederated Tribes of the Colville Reservation, ————U.S.————, 65 L.Ed. 10 (1980).....9-12

White Mountain Apache v. Bracker, ———— U.S.————, 65 L.Ed.2d, 665, 672, (1980).....7-11-12

page

Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217, 220 (1959).....7-11

STATUTES

Indian Reorganization Act of 1934, 25 U.S.C. § 461 8,9

Mescalero Apache Tribe Constitution 8-9

New Mexico Enabling Act, 36 Stat. 557 (1910) 8

Public Law 83-280, 67 Stat. 588 (1953) as amended, 18 U.S.C. §1162 (b) 8-10

Treaty With the Apaches, 10 Stat. 979 (1852).....8

MISCELLANEOUS

F. Cohen, Handbook of Federal Indian Law 286 8

IN THE

Supreme Court of the United States

OCTOBER TERM, 1980

No. 80-778

STATE OF NEW MEXICO AND HAROLD F. OLSON,
Individually and as Director, New Mexico
Department of Game and Fish,
Petitioners,

v.

THE MESCALERO APACHE TRIBE,
Respondent.

BRIEF IN OPPOSITION TO PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE TENTH CIRCUIT

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Petitioners (hereinafter State) neglect to inform the Court that this case was presented to the District Court of New Mexico largely on stipulated facts. This Stipulation is attached hereto as an appendix. The corresponding page numbers in the record are pages 117-137 of Vol. I.

The Statement of the Case in the Petition is incomplete and misleading. The Petition implies that the Tribe's hunting and fishing program is carried on entirely in connection with the Inn of the Mountain Gods resort complex (Pet.p.3). Actually, the Tribe's hunting and fishing program existed long before the opening of the Inn in 1975. The only hunting and fishing related to the Inn are the package hunts and fishing at the Inn's lake. The majority of big game hunting is not related to the Inn, and the lake at the Inn is only one of several man-made lakes stocked for fishing on the Reservation.

While it is true that the State has in the past stocked streams on the Reservation, essentially all of this occurred prior to 1970. Between 1970 and 1976, the State stocked only a part of one stream and since 1976 has not stocked any part of any stream on the Reservation. None of the several man-made lakes has ever been stocked by the State. All waters within the Reservation are stocked with fish from the National Fish Hatchery at Mescalero (App.pp.123a-124a)

The fish hatchery is operated pursuant to an agreement between the Tribe and the Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, Department of the Interior. Federal personnel not only provide fish for the Reservation waters, but technical assistance as well. The agreement further provides that the Tribe will establish regulations for the conservation of fish resources, consistent, insofar as possible, with State regulation (App.p.123a). A fish biologist employed by the Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife recommends to the Tribal Council where and how many fish should be stocked within the Reservation based upon periodic surveys of all Mescalero Reservation fishing waters (App.p.124a).

The Petition also implies that a lone Bureau of Indian Affairs Range Conservationist is responsible for all of the deer, elk, antelope and bear population estimates upon which recommendations for seasons and bag limits are made to the Tribal Council. Actually, the Tribe employs seven full-time conservation officers who assist the range conservationist. All of these tribal personnel have received training in game and fish management and law enforcement (App.pp.122a-123a). In addition to formal training, these officers have substantial on-the-job experience. Id. While the State has participated in this training at the request of the Tribe, these requests have been limited (App.p.125a).

The State receives federal funds to support the administration of hunting and fishing in the state based on the number of state licenses sold and the number of acres of land in the state. The area of the Mescalero Apache Reservation is taken into account for this purpose, as were the number of state-licensed hunters and fishermen on the Reservation during the time such licenses were required by the Tribe (App.pp.125a-126a). However, within the boundaries of the Mescalero Apache Reservation, the State of New Mexico, in the last eight years, (this statement made in 1978) has not selected or improved any land or water areas as adaptable for wildlife feeding, resting or breeding places. The State has not adopted nor formulated any plans for restocking lakes and streams with fish, has not conducted research into problems of fish management or administration of fish resources, and has undertaken no wildlife restoration projects (Pet. 34a).

The only reference in the Petition to conflict between the Tribe and the State in respect to fish and game management is that tribal ordinance specifically provides that no State license is required. There are many other areas of conflict. Tribal seasons and bag limits for both hunting and fishing rarely, if ever, coincide causing annual conflict between the Tribe and the State (Pet. p.34a). Indeed, at the initiation of this lawsuit the Tribe was forced to obtain a temporary restraining order to prevent the State from arresting non-Indian hunters for hunting on the Reservation during one of the Tribe's big game seasons which began prior to the State's season. State law prohibits a person from hunting elk or antelope for two consecutive years, while tribal law does not (App.p.130a). This has led to the arrest in the past of non-Indian hunters on the Reservation(App.p.131a-133a). Also, state law requires juvenile hunters to obtain a Hunter Safety Certificate, while there is no such tribal requirement. Id at 133.

Finally, the State neglects to mention that the Stipulation contains a provision that "...the [New Mexico] Department [of Game and Fish] considers that the hunting and fishing ordinances of the Tribe presently maintain the fish and wildlife populations within the Reservation at levels consistent with good management and have not had an adverse impact on fish and wildlife outside the Reservation." (App.p.134a).

I. The Decision of the Tenth Circuit Does Not Conflict With the Decision of Any Circuit Court of Appeals.

The State argues that there is a direct conflict between the present case and United States v. State of Montana, 604 F.2d 1162 (9th Cir. 1979) cert. granted, No. 79-1128, 48 U.S.L.W. 3661 (April 14, 1980) which allowed dual tribal/state regulation of hunting on the Crow Reservation (the issue of the applicability of state fish and game laws to non-Indians is not before the Court in that case as no Cross-Petition was filed raising the issue).

The decision in United States v. Montana is easily distinguished by the existence there of substantial fee patent land owned by non-Indians. Furthermore, the Ninth Circuit itself distinguished the case before it from the case of Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians v. North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission, 588 F.2d 75 (4th Cir. 1978), Petition for Writ of Certiorari voluntarily dismissed, 48 U.S.L.W. 3786 (May 22, 1980) on the grounds that North Carolina had no substantial interest in the Cherokee fishing program and therefore had no authority to regulate non-Indians fishing on the Cherokee Reservation. The same factor distinguishes the present case from the United States v. Montana. This is indicated by the Tenth Circuit opinion as well as the opinion of the District Court. Thus, the Tenth Circuit observed:

> In the factual situation presented by this case, the State is unable to claim that either it or its lands played any significant role in the creation and preservation of the reservation wildlife resources. Instead, much of the reservation wildlife is effectively a creation of the Tribe and the federal government. For example, the antelope population of the reservation is non-migratory, and few animals ever cross the boundaries. In recent years, the herd's protection has been entirely in tribal hands. Furthermore, the Tribe has taken affirmative steps to build an elk herd. Prior to 1966, only 13 elk grazed in the general area of the reservation. In 1966-67, the National Park Service donated 162 elk. Through considerable range development, the Tribe removed cattle from direct competition with the elk for grazing land. The elk herd has grown to 1200, many of which wander off the reservation during part of the year. The migratory elk thus provide significant hunting opportunities for non-members outside the reservation, and the Tribe, despite its fundamental role in herd development, makes no attempt to limit that hunting.

The reservation has no natural lakes. Several man-made lakes have been constructed with federal funds and are stocked from a national fish hatchery on the reservation. Federal officials from the hatchery also provide the Tribe with technical assistance. The State has never stocked reservation lakes and no longer stocks any reservation streams. The entire tribal fishing program now exists independent of the State. Pet. 5a, 6a.

The District Court, after reviewing the facts similarly conclude that "In short, the Tribe conducts its complete fish and game management program exclusive of the State of New Mexico." (Pet. p.34a).

The Tenth Circuit itself specifically distinguished United States v. State of Montana on two grounds:

a. The Ninth Circuit assumed that Tribal-State cooperation would be forthcoming (604 F.2d at 1172). By contrast, "Because of the Mescalero Apache Tribe's clear position in the case, we [the Tenth Circuit] may make no such assumption." Pet. 13a at f.11 eleven.

b. The State's regulation was needed for conservation and proper management (604 F.2d at 1166). See also 604 F.2d 1170 - Preservation of fish and game requires state involvement. By contrast, the Mescaleros have done an exemplary job of managing their game and fish and no state regulation is required. (Pet.5a).

The Fourth Circuit in Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians at 79, f.n. 3 made clear that each case of state regulation of on-reservation hunting and fishing is unique and may result in different holdings depending on differing variables. Because of the importance of the facts of each case, little would be gained by this Court's review of the Tenth Circuit decision. Also, there is no need for this Court to grant the State's Petition to resolve any conflict among the Circuits as no conflict exists.

II. The Tenth Circuit's Concept of Tribal Sovereignty Is in Line With Decisions of This Court.

The State argues that a court may make a finding of sovereignty only after applying the federal preemption and infrigement of tribal government tests. Only if one of these two approaches oust state jurisdiction may a court conclude that sovereignty exists according to the State's approach.

The State's argument is contrary to every statement on the subject ever made by this Court. The infrigement test of Williams v. Lee, 358 U.S. 217 (1959) would not exist if sovereignty did not exist independent of the test since it is precisely state infrigement of tribal sovereignty which is forbidden by the test. "Essentially, absent governing Acts of Congress, the question has always been whether the state action infringed on the right of reservation Indians to make their own laws and be ruled by them." Id at 220. The right to make the rules by which one is governed is the essence of sovereignty and this right is assumed to be one of the attributes of Indian tribes. The question is whether state action infringes on that right, not whether the right itself exists.

As for federal preemption, this Court in White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, ————U.S. ————————, 65 L.Ed2d, 665, 672, (1980) specifically stated that "The tradition of Indian sovereignty over the reservation and tribal members must inform the determination whether the exercise of state authority has been preempted by operation of federal law." Thus, sovereignty is not a conclusion which derives from analysis. Rather it is an aid to analysis. It exists unless specifically taken away by Congress. White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, supra; Santa Clara Pueblo v. Martinez, 436 U.S. 49 (1978); United States v. Wheeler, 435 U.S. 313 (1978).

The Tenth Circuit's approach of assuming sovereignty and then applying the federal preemption and tribal infringement tests in light of that sovereignty is precisely the approach required by this Court. It is pertinent that the Tenth Circuit explicitly states it does not rely on tribal sovereignty alone to conclude that state power is preempted (Pet.14a).

No purpose would be served in reviewing the Tenth Circuit Opinion.

III. The Tenth Circuit's Conclusion That Federal Law Preempts State Jurisdiction Over Hunting and Fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation Is Sound and Should Not Be Reviewed.

The Tenth Circuit Opinion makes clear that its preemption analysis must be considered in "light of the Tribe's inherent powers over reservation land and wildlife..." (Pet.p.14a). Central to the Court's entire opinion is the fact that wildlife was "not much less necessary to the existence of the Indians than the atmosphere they breathed." United States v. Winans, 198 U.S. 371, 381 (1904). The Tribe has inherent authority over wildlife, stemming largely from the traditional reliance on wild game for basic survival needs. See F. Cohen, Handbook of Federal Indian Law 286.

Utilizing the concept of tribal sovereignty over wildlife to aid its determination, the Tenth Circuit found six factors which had preemptive effect: 1) The Treaty of July 1, 1852; 2) the New Mexico Enabling Act, 36 Stat. 557 (1910); 3) the Indian Reorganization Act of 1934 (IRA) 25 U.S.C. Section 461 et seq; 4) the Tribal Constitution and ordinances enacted pursuant to the IRA; 5) extensive federal developmental assistance; and 6) the negative inferences from Public Law 280.

The starting point of the Court's analysis is the Treaty of July 1, 1852 which places the Tribe "under exclusive federal jurisdiction." This provision in turn sheds light on the Enabling Act which places Indian lands in New Mexico "under the absolute jurisdiction and control of the Congress of the United States." "In the area of resource management, the treaty language in this case suggests the 'absolute' jurisdiction is indeed 'exclusive' jurisdiction." (Pet.p.15a).

The State objects that this federal dominance preempting state game and fish laws cannot be squared with the case of Mescalero Apache Tribe v. O'Cheskey, 625 F.2d 967 (10th Cir. 1980) reh. denied, August 25, 1980, Petition for Certiorari docketed November 20, 1980, in which no preemption of state taxing power was found. Even assuming arguendo the correctness of the O'Cheskey decision, the Tenth Circuit specifically distinguished the dual regulatory scheme involved in the present case, from the dual taxing scheme involved in the O'Cheskey case. Dual regulatory schemes of necessity create mutual dislocations. Pet. 13a at f.n. 11 ; Washington v. Confederated Tribes of the Colville Reservation, ————U.S.————, 65 L.Ed. 10 (1980) at 32. The many conflicts between the Tribe's seasons, bag limits, and other hunting regulations and those of the State, bear out the accuracy of the observation by the Tenth Circuit. Dual regulation of wildlife is probably inherently inconsistent with the trusteeship duty of the Tribe to manage its wildlife for the benefit of its members. Cf. Pet. p.22a.

Additional sources of federal preemption are the Indian Reorganization Act and Tribal Ordinances passed pursuant to the Tribe's federally-approved Constitution. The Tribe's Constitution specifically authorizes resolutions governing hunting and fishing on the Reservation. In fact, the Tribe's hunting and fishing program implements an overriding federal policy.

Where a tribal enactment implements an overriding federal policy, it has preemptive effect. (Pet.p.16a), citing Fisher v. District Court, 424 U.S. 382, 390 (1976); Cf. United States v. Mazurie, 419 U.S. 544, 556-557 (1975).

That an overriding federal policy is involved here is apparent from the extensive federal participation in the Tribe's wildlife management program. This federal participation is itself preemptive of state jurisdiction. Eastern Band of Cherokee Indians v. North Carolina Wildlife Resources Commission, 591 F.2d 75 (4th Cir. 1978), Petition for Writ of Certiorari voluntarily dismissed, 48 U.S.L.W. 3786 (May 22, 1980).

The federal policy of leaving tribes free to manage their own wildlife is also implied in Public Law 280. While that statute gave states the unilateral option of assuming limited civil and criminal jurisdiction over Indian country (until amended in 1968), it nevertheless protected tribes from losing "any right, privilege, or immunity afforded under Federal treaty, agreement, or statutes with respect to hunting, trapping, or fishing or the control, licensing, or regulating thereof." The negative inference is inescapable that these matters are in exclusive tribal and federal control.

Although, not specifically relied on by the Tenth Circuit, 18 U.S.C. Section 1165 which makes it a federal offense to hunt or fish on an Indian reservation without appropriate tribal permission provides further evidence of an overriding federal policy of protecting tribal wildlife and keeping regulatory authority in the Tribe.

It is clear that the Tenth Circuit made "a particularized inquiry into the nature of the state, federal, and tribal interests at stake, an inquiry designed to determine whether, in the specific context, the exercise of state authority would violate federal law." White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, supra at 673. This case deals with value generated almost entirely on the Reservation in which the Tribe has a significant interest. There is no perceivable state interest since they do not stock tribal waters and the Tribe's game is either non-migratory, or the effect of its migration is to bolster state hunting off of the Reservation, (Pet.pp.5a-6a).

Furthermore, while the income from tribal programs is significant to the Tribe, the scope of the Tribe's program is miniscule compared to that of the state. For example, in a recent year the Tribe sold 50 elk licenses, while the state sold 14,000. Ten tribal antelope licenses were available, compared to 3500 for the state. Tribal deer licenses permitted the taking of 500 deer; the state issued 100,000 deer licenses (Pet.pp.5a-6a). The federal and tribal interests are thus overwhelming while the State's interest is minimal given the facts of this case. There is no conclusion to be drawn other than that the state authority over hunting and fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation has been completely preempted.

IV. Application of New Mexico's Hunting and Fishing Laws on the Mescalero Apache Reservation Would Seriously Infringe on Tribal Self-Government Contrary to the Principles of Williams v. Lee.

The Tenth Circuit noted that the purpose of the Williams v. Lee tribal-infringement test is to "(seek) an accommodation between the interests of the tribes and the Federal Government, on the one hand, and those of the State, on the other." Washington v. Confederated Tribes, supra at 31. (Pet.pp18a-19a). In that regard, it is very similar to the purpose of the preemption test of White Mountain Apache Tribe v. Bracker, supra.

As the Stipulated facts show, the State has virtually no interest while the Tribe's interest is paramont. Thus, in accomodating state and tribal interests, the scale leans heavily in the Tribe's favor.

As has been shown, conflict between the Tribe's regulatory scheme and that of the State is pronounced. Dual regulatory schemes have produced precisely the mutual dislocation alluded to by this Court in Washington v. Confederated Tribes, supra at 32. The plain fact is that Tribal and State interests are not in harmony. The Tribe sets its bag limits and seasons consistent with the needs for conservation on the Reservation. The Tribe is the only entity with the proper information to do that. The State, in catering to the public at large, may feel it is appropriate to prohibit elk and antelope hunting by the same person in consecutive years so that this hunting opportunity might be spread around. The Tribe may desire to build good will in its tourism business by allowing such hunting in consecutive years. The record indicates problems with State arrests of non-Indian hunters in past years (App.p.131a-134a). Nothing could be more injurious to goodwill than to have a guest at the Inn be arrested upon leaving the Reservation. Yet were dual regulations to apply, a guest would have to comply with State law, which is not in harmony with the needs of the Reservation, or face such arrest. A more direct interference with tribal self-government could not be imagined. The Tenth Circuit Opinion is sound in this regard and need not be reviewed.

CONCLUSION

The State's Petition for a Writ of Certiorari should be denied.

Respectfully submitted,

George E. Fettinger
FETTINGER & BLOOM
P.O. Drawer M
Alamogordo, New Mexico 88310

Attorneys for Respondent.

Of Counsel:

Kim Jerome Gottschalk
FETTINGER & BLOOM
P.O. Drawer M
Alamogordo, New Mexico 88310

Norman D. Bloom, Jr.
FETTINGER & BLOOM
P.O. Drawer M
Alamogordo, New Mexico 88310

IN THE
United States District Court
FOR THE DISTRICT OF NEW MEXICO

MESCALERO APACHE TRIBE,

Plaintiff,

vs. No. CIV 395 M

STATE OF NEW MEXICO and
WILLIAM S. HUEY, Individually
and as Director of the New Mexico Department of Game
and Fish, or his Successors
In Office,

Defendants.

STIPULATION

Plaintiff Mescalero Apache Tribe and Defendants State of New Mexico and William S. Huey stipulate as follows:

I. Scope and Use of Stipulation

1. This Stipulation is made for the sole purpose of being introduced in evidence before the District Court to be considered in adjudicating the legal issues presented in this proceeding.

2. The facts and evidence contained in this Stipulation are for purposes of this proceeding only and any appeal taken in connection herewith. They shall not be deemed res judicata for any other proceeding nor snall any party hereto be collaterally estopped or otherwise bound by them in any other proceeding.

II. General Facts

1. The Mescalero Apache Tribe is a federally recognized Indian Tribe governed by its revised constitution of January 12, 1965, which was adopted pursuant to 25 U.S.C. 476. The governing body of the Mescalero Apache Tribe is duly recognized by the Secretary of the Interior of the United States.

2. The Mescalero Apache Tribe occupies the Mescalero Apache Reservation which is presently situated wholly within Otero County, New Mexico.

3. Indian lands within the State of New Mexico consist of nineteen Indian pueblos including Taos, Picuris, San Juan Santa Clara, Pojoaque, Nambe, San Ildefonso, Cochiti, San Felipe, Santo Domingo, Sandia, Isleta, Jemez, Santa Ana, Zia, Tesuque, Zuni, Acoma and Laguna, and seven Indian reservations including Mescalero Apache Reservation, Jicarilla Apache Reservation, the Navajo Reservation, the Navajo (Alamo) Reservation, the Navajo (Canoncito) Reservation, the Navajo (Ramah) Reservation, and the Ute Mountain Reservation. The relevancy of this fact is not conceded by the Mescalero Apache Tribe.

4. The nineteen Indian pueblos and seven Indian reservations located within the State of New Mexico comprise 7,348,563 acres or 11,482 square miles. The relevancy of this fact is not conceded by the Mescalero Apache Tribe.

III. Treaty of July 1, 1852.

1. At least one representative of the Mescalero Apache Tribe signed a treaty with the United States of America dated July 1, 1852, 10 Stat. 979, which submitted the tribe and its members to the laws, jurisdiction, and government of the United States of America.

2. Article 9 of the Treaty of July 1, 1852, 10 Stat. 979, provided that the United States government would designate, settle and adjust the boundaries of the signatories to the treaty. The terms of the Treaty did not designate any territory as a reservation for the Mescalero Apache Tribe.

3. In 1855 the Mescalero Apache Tribe and representatives of the United States signed a treaty which did in fact designate reservation boundaries for the Mescalero Apache Tribe, but this treaty was never ratified by the United States Senate. The Mescalero Apache Tribe does not concede the relevancy of this fact.

4. The Reservation of the Mescalero Apache Tribe was originally created by a Presidential Executive Order in 1873. Subsequent Presidential Executive Orders relating to the Mescalero Apache Reservation altered the boundaries of the Reservation by deleting from or adding to the original boundaries of the 1873 Executive Order Reservation.

5. The Presidential Executive Orders of February 2, 1874, October 20, 1875, May 19, 1882, and March 24, 1883 each successively cancelled the immediately prior Presidential Executive Order establishing the Mescalero Apache Reservation. The present boundaries of the Reservation are as set forth in the Executive Order of March 24, 1883.

6. The Presidential Executive Orders of March 2, 1909 and October 20, 1910, placed parts of the Mescalero Apache Reservtion in the Alamo National Forest and subjected these lands to the laws pertaining to national forests and provided for use therein by the Indian Service and by individuals comprising the Mescalero Apache Tribe. A Presidential Executive Order of February 17, 1912, rescinded the Presidential Executive Orders of 1909 and 1910 insofar as they applied to the Mescalero Apache Reservation and restored the reservation in all respects to the status existing prior to the Presidential Executive Orders of March 2, 1909 as though the inclusion of the lands within the Alamo National Forest had not been ordered.

IV. Inn Of The Mountain Gods.

1. The Inn of the Mountain Gods is located within the boundaries of the Mescalero Apache Reservation. The Inn is a large resort complex consisting of a hotel, stocked lake, golf course, tennis facilities, and swimming pool.

2. The development and construction of the Inn of the Mountain Gods resort complex was principally financed by the Economic Development Administration (EDA), an agency of the United States Department of Commerce.

3. The Inn of the Mountain Gods resort complex was financed through EDA and other federal funds and one loan of $6,000,000 from the Bank of New Mexico. 90% of the Bank of New Mexico loan is guaranteed by the Secretary of the Interior under the Indian Financing Act of 1974, 25 U.S.C. Sections 1451-1543. 10% of the loan is guaranteed by the Tribe through an assignment of a Certificate of Deposit in the amount of $600,000 to the Bank of New Mexico. The source of these assigned funds is Tribal funds previously deposited with the Secretary of Interior. $5,400,000 of the loan (which bears interest at an annual rate of 1.1%) was assigned to the New Mexico State Investment Council, a transaction provided for in the initial loan document.

4. The Mescalero Apache Tribe has constructed certain additional facilities at the Inn of the Mountain Gods utilizing both EDA grants (50%) received after the initial grant and Tribal funds (50%). The additional construction includes trap and skeet shooting (clay bird) range, a stables complex, a recreation building related to the golf course, a kitchen addition, toilet facilities for the golf course, air conditioning for the hotel rooms, various signs, paved walkways on the golf course, additional tennis courts, paddle tennis courts and a water treatment facility. Portions of the above are considered public works by EDA and are funded 100% with federal funds.

5. At least 97% of the guests at the Inn of the Mountain Gods are non-Indians from off the Reservation.

6. The Inn of the Mountain Gods is a part of the tourism program established by the Mescalero Apache Tribe to replace anticipated declining income from lumbering enterprises which historically have been the largest income producing activities within the Mescalero Apache Reservation.

7. The tourism program of the Mescalero Apache Tribe is designed to attract non-Indians to the Reservation as well as to Sierra Blanca Ski Resort which is a Tribal enterprise located off the Reservation. The hunting, fishing, camping and picnicking program of the Mescalero Apache Tribe is a part of its overall tourism program. Package hunts of big game animals are held to help stimulate business at the Inn of the Mountain Gods. Package hunts normally occur between the summer tourism season and the winter ski season. The purpose of the tourism program is to provide income for the Mescalero Apache Tribe which may be used for its governmental purposes and economic development.

V. Hunting and Fishing Program - Mescalero Apache Tribe

1. Pursuant to Article XI, Section 1(c) of the revised constitution of the Mescalero Apache Tribe, the Tribal Council has adopted a general hunting and fishing ordinance purporting to govern all persons, Indian and non-Indian, hunting and fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation. The Tribal Council has also adopted an ordinance specifically for the 1977 hunting and fishing seasons which specifies the Mescalero Apache Tribal rules and regulations governing hunting and fishing on the Rreservation for that particular year. Ordinance 77-1 specifically provides: "No state licnese of any kind shall be necessary for any person." The State of New Mexico does not stipulate or concede that this provision in any way prohibits it from imposing a licensing requirement on non-Indians hunting or fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation.

2. Any non-Indian seeking to hunt or fish on the Mescalero Apache Reservation must purchase a tribal license. Game tags are issued with each tribal license. These game tags are required by tribal regulation to be attached to game taken on the Mescalero Apache Reservation.

3. The Mescalero Apache Tribe presently employs seven full-time tribal conservation officers who assist a Bureau of Indian Affairs (BIA) range conservationist with certain game management functions. The BIA is also able on occasion to provide additional technical assistance. These tribal conservation officers assist the BIA range conservationist in making aerial surveys and pellet group transect studies to determine the deer, elk, antelope and bear populations on the Mescalero Apache Reservation in order to recommend to the Tribal Council bag limits and seasons for these big game animals. These recommendations are submitted to Tribal Council for its consideration in setting bag limits and seasons for the Mescalero Apache Tribe.

4. All tribal conservation officers have received training in game and fish management and law enforcement. One officer has approximately sixteen years experience in gane and fish management; one has approximately nine years work experience; two have approximately two years experience each; and three have approximately six months experience each.

5. The Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife of the United States Fish and Wildlife Service, Department of the Interior, operates a national fish hatchery on the Mescalero Apache Reservation and, pursuant to an agreement with the Tribe, provides technical assistance in the management and development of fishery resources in Reservation waters and it likewise provides fish for stocking Reservation waters. The agreement, entered into in 1959, also provides that the Mescalero Apache Tribe will establish regulations for the conservation of fishery resources which insofar as possible will be in conformity with the regulations of the State of New Mexico. The fish hatchery is located on Reservation land leased to the Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife of the Department of Interior by the Tribe. The fish hatchery serves other Indian reservations and Pueblos and federal facilities in New Mexico and surrounding states.

6. There are no natural lakes within the Mescalero Apache Reservation. Several man-made lakes have been constructed over the years with federal funds, some of which also have picnic and camping facilities constructed by the Tribe. The State of New Mexico has never stocked any lake within the Mescalero Apache Reservation. Prior to 1970 the New Mexico Department of Game and Fish and the Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife stocked streams within the Reservation. Between 1970-76, the Department stocked part of one stream on the Reservation and since 1976 has not stocked this stream. All other waters within the Reservation are stocked exclusively with fish from the National Fish Hatchery at Mescalero. A fish biologist employed by the Bureau of Sport Fisheries and Wildlife recommends to the Tribal Council where and how many fish should be stocked within the Reservation, based upon periodic surveys of all Mescalero Apache Reservation fishing waters.

7. An elk herd numbering 162 elk was released on the Mescalero Apache Reservation in 1966 and 1967. These elk were donated by the National Park Service. The

New Mexico Department of Game and Fish issued a permit for the importation of these elk from Wyoming into New Mexico and generally encouraged this importation. There was some opposition to this importation from one federal agency. It is estimated that there were 13 eld in the general area of the Reservation at the time of the importation in 1966-67. It is estimated that there are approximately 1,200 elk in the general area of the Reservation at the present time.

8. The antelope population within the Mescalero Apache Reservation is non-migratory and these animals seldom, if ever, leave the exterior boundaries of the Mescalero Apache Reservation. A part of the elk, deer and bear populations of the Sacramento Mountains range freely on and off the Mescalero Apache Reservation throughout the year.

9. Horses, cattle and big game compete with one another for the available forage on the Mescalero Apache Reservation. The Tribal Council has made some effort to reduce the wild horse population on the Reservation by entering into one or more contracts for their capture and sale. These wild horses, estimated to number 2,400, unlike the cattle and big game, do no generate significant revenue for the benefit of the Mescalero Apache Tribe.

10. The New Mexico Department of Game and Fish has provided the Mescalero Apache Tribe with any fish or wildlife management assistance which the Tribe has requested, including the training of tribal conservation officers. Such requests have been limited.

11. The hunting brochures written, printed and distributed by the Mescalero Apache Tribe for the 1971-1976 seasons state that all New Mexico hunting regulations apply to hunting on the Reservation.

12. In response to a Court order previously entered in this cause, the President of the Mescalero Apache Tribe advised all hunters of the Mescalero Apache Reservation by a letter dated September 2, 1977 that all hunters on the Mescalero Apache Reservation are required to hold a 1977 New Mexico hunting license and any game taken from the Reservation must have the Mescalero and New Mexico game tag attached thereon.

13. Federal matching monies (through the Pittman-Robertson Act, 16 U.S.C. 669 et seq. (hunting) and the Dingle-Johnson Act, 16 U.S.C. 777 et seq. (fishing) are allocated to states on a ratio that involves the number of license buyers in the state and the number of acres in the state. To qualify for federal monies under the Pittman-Robertson and Dingle-Johnson acts, the New Mexico Department of Game and Fish may not divert any license fees to any other purpose than the administration of the Department. The territorial area of the Mescalero Apache Tribe (approximately 460,384 acres) is taken into account in calculating New Mexico's share of Pittman-Robertson and Dingle-Johnson Act funds as are the number of state-licensed hunters and fishermen who hunt or fish on the Reservation. No Dingle-Johnson funds have been spent directly within the Mescalero Apache Reservation within the last 6-8 years. In recent years the Pittman-Robertson formula has resulted in an average of $8.44 in federal funds to New Mexico per state-licensed hunter and the Dingle-Johnson formula has resulted in an average of $1.56 in federal funds to New Mexico per state-licensed fishermen.

14. For the years 1972 through 1976, The Mescalero Apache Tribe issued the following number of fishing permits:

1972	9,521
1973	10,985
1974	9,135
1975	19,454
1976	29,163
Total	78,258

State of New Mexico fishing licenses have been required each year for non-indian fishermen either by the Tribe or by court order.

15. Since 1972 approx. 2500 non-Indian hunters have hunted on the Mescalero Apache Reservation. State of New Mexico hunting licenses have been required each year for non-Indian hunters either by the Tribe or by court order.

VI. Hunting and Fishing Program - State of New Mexico

1. There is an interrelationship between the 7,348,563 acres or 11,482 square miles on Indian land within the State of New Mexico and other areas of the State of New Mexico insofar as management and conservation of fish and wildlife are concerned. The quantitative and qualitative aspects of this interrelationship are disputed by the parties.

2. The New Mexico Department of Game and Fish has maintained a fish and wildlife management and conservation program within the State of New Mexico since 1895.

3. The New Mexico Department of Game and Fish is charged by state statute with the responsibility of protecting, conserving and regulating the fish and wildlife resources within New Mexico. The Tribe does not stipulate that this responsibility legally extends to its Reservation. In exercising its statutory responsibility, the New Mexico Department of Game and Fish utilizes fish and wildlife management principles (e.g. herd management concept) which take into consideration the effects of the natural resources of water, plants, soil and animals among other things on the fish and wildlife resources. The New Mexico Department of Game and Fish conservation and management programs recognize that fish and wildlife populations and their habitats are interrelated and comprise a major portion of a complex and dynamic network of relationships, which are an ecosystem. The New Mexico Department of Game and Fish considers these factors in formulating its fish and wildlife conservation and management programs and employs an ecosystem approach, which demands reasonable management of ecosystems and all species contained therein.

4. Indians, non-Indians, residents and non-residents have equal fishing and hunting opportunities on non-reservation public waters and lands within the State of New Mexico.

5. An essential management and conservation mechanism utilized by both the New Mexico Department of Game and Fish and the Mescalero Apache Tribe in controlling the annual harvest of fish and wildlife is the regulation of the number of fishing and hunting licenses issued in conjunction with the length of each hunting or fishing season.

6. The New Mexico Department of Game and Fish is conducting fish and wildlife research projects in a effort to identify existing conditions and to anticipate the future supplies and demands upon the fish and wildlife resources in New Mexico. These studies have assisted in identifying the effects of poaching on the fish and wildlife resources. No New Mexico Department of Game and Fish personnel have entered the Mescalero Apache Reservation to conduct any such fish or wildlife research within the Reservation since 1967.

7. The New Mexico Department of Game and Fish employs 142 commissioned officers who have received training in game and fish management as well as wildlife law enforcement. Within the last ten years, virtually every commissioned officer has had at least a college degree in game management or in a game management related field. In addition, every commissioned officer must attend and complete the State Police Academy law enforcement course and the three week game and fish management and wildlife enforcement course as well as attend an annual week long in-service game and fish management and wildlife enforcement course.

8. The following Schedule A lists the Department of Game and Fish expenditures during the fiscal year periods 1971 through 1976.

These expenditures were made to provide an adequate and flexible operation for the protection of game and fish in the State of New Mexico. These expenditures were used for the propagation of game planning, protection, regulation and conservation to the extent necessary to provide and maintain an adequate supply of game and fish within the State of New Mexico.

The schedule also indicates the actual Pittman-Robertson and Dingle-Johnson federal reimbursements that were received by the Department during the same period as matching funds under approved projects by the federal government.

The federal matching through Pittman-Robertson and Dingle-Johnson is allocated to the states on a formula of 40% in the ratio which the area of each state bears to the total area of all the states and 60% in the ratio which the number of persons holding paid hunting and fishing licenses.

The total land contribution of Indian lands is 9.4% of the total acreage in the State of New Mexico. The Mescalero Apache Tribe's acreage (approximately 460,384 acres) comprises of .0059 percent of the total New Mexico acreage.

SCHEDULE A

DEPARTMENT EXPENDITURES COMPARED TO FEDERAL AID REIMBURSEMENT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1971 - 1976

FISCAL YEAR	DEPARTMENT EXPENDITURES
60th (1971-72)	$ 2,751,935.39
61st (1972-73)	2,997,421,67
62nd (1973-74)	3,373,935.36
63rd (1974-75)	3,993,831.07
64th (1975-76)	4,457,005.23
65th (1976-77)	5,038,833.05
	$22,612,961.77

PITTMAN-ROBERTSON	DINGLE-JOHNSON	TOTAL FEDERAL MONIES RECEIVED
$ 458,777.97	$ 88,800.00	$ 547,577.97
523,116.10	70,808.87	593,924.97
490,319.43	98,306.83	588,626.26
583,821.26	129,676.30	713,497.56
594,791.66	400,194.30	994,985.96
907,930.27	171,407.61	1,079.337.88
$3,558,756.69	$ 959,193.91	$4,517,950.60

9. The New Mexico State Game Commission has, either upon request or upon its own initiative, amended its hunting and fishing proclamations to accommodate the preferences of the Mescalero Apache Tribe and other Indian tribes with respect to seasons, bag limits and other matters pertaining to hunting and fishing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation and other Indian lands. All such amendments were consistent with adequate fish and wildlife management practices when made. At least one instance on continuing conflict is the State prohibition against the purchase of an elk license two consecutive years by the same person. Tribal ordinance does not contain any such prohibition.

VII. Law Enforcement Activities - State of New Mexico

1. Section 53-2-31, NMSA, 1953 Comp. provides that the hunting and fishing laws and regulations of the State of New Mexico are applicable to "...all Indians off the reservation within this state, or coming into this state from adjoining states, and to all persons hunting on any Indian reservation with this state...." except that no Indian is required to have a license to hunt or fish within limits of the Reservation where he resides. The State of New Mexico has enforced and intends to continue to enforce its hunting and fishing laws and regulations against non-Indians hunting and fishing on Indian lands, including the Mescalero Apache Reservation. Although all enforcement against non-Indians has in fact taken place off the Reservation, the State of New Mexico does not stipulate to a lack of jurisdiction to go onto the Reservation for such enforcement.

2. The State of New Mexico published literature for the use of the general public which states:

PRIVATE OR INDIAN LANDS

Obtain permission before hunting on private or Indian lands. Nothing in this proclamation shall be construed to authorize hunting on any privately owned land without the landowner's permission nor hunting on any Indian reservation except in conformity with regulations of the State Game Commission and of the Indian tribe.

Indian Reservations

Permission must be obtained before going on any Indian reservation to hunt or fish. A state license is required for non-Indians, in addition to the tribal permit. For each reservation listed, the tribal council has imposed further restrictions within the framework of season dates set forth below. In a few cases, no hunts are offered on the species listed. All dates below refer to 1978 unless otherwise indicated.

The required tribal permits are available only from the tribe involved. For exact information on season dates and availability of permits, contact the tribe directly.

3. In April of 1969, Wendell Chino, President of the Mescalero Apache Tribe, wrote a letter to the New Mexico Department of Game and Fish, as well as to various other agencies including several federal agencies, informing them that their personnel would no longer be welcome within the Reservation without tribal permission. Since that time, in order to avoid the possibility of conflict or confrontation, New Mexico Department of Game and Fish officers have not entered the Mescalero Apache Reservation to enforce state fish and game laws and regulations.

4. The hunting and fishing laws and regulations of the State of New Mexico have never been and are not now enforced against Indians, including members of the Mescalero Apache Tribe, with respect to hunting and fishing activities within Indian lands.

5. The only documented cases of enforcement of hunting and fishing laws and regulations on the part of the State of New Mexico with respect to hunting and fishing activities on Indian land involve non-Indians.

6. In furtherance of their law enforcement duties, New Mexico Department of Game and Fish officers routinely stop persons to ascertain whether the game or fish in their possession was legally taken. Until such a stop is made, it is impossible for the officer to determine where the game or fish were taken and whether such game or fish were taken in accordance with the game and fish laws and regulations of the State of New Mexico.

7. Two Louisiana hunters, Messrs. Shaw and Oliver, holders of Tribal elk licenses, each killed an elk within the Mescalero Apache Reservation in 1976. The State of New Mexico informed the United States Fish and Wildlife Service that these elk had been killed without New Mexico hunting licenses and one of the two hunters had his elk meat confiscated by federal agents. New Mexico State criminal charges were brought against both Oliver and Shaw in Magistrate Court in Otero County, New Mexico, and each party plead guilty to the charges and each party paid a $600.00 fine. The Mescalero Apache Tribe offered to pay their legal expenses if they would challenge the legality of the charges brought against them in the State of New Mexico.

8. On October 6, 1977, New Mexico Department of Game and Fish officers questioned two hunters, Messrs. Crumley and Moretz, who stated that they had been hunting on the Mescalero Apache Reservation without State hunting licenses and that they had been told by an employee at Gibson's in Ruidoso that a State hunting license was not necessary for hunting on the Mescalero Apache Reservation until a kill had been made. The Department of Game and Fish officers did not issue citations for hunting without a State of New Mexico hunting license in this instance. Employees at Gibson's in Ruidoso deny making any such statement to Messrs. Crumley and Moretz and Gibson's tontinues to serve as a vendor of state licenses.

9. On or about October 6, 1977, an individual observed elk meat being packed in a Ryder Rental truck on the Mescalero Apache Reservation and, on his own initiative, he voluntarily related to a New Mexico

Department of Game and Fish officer that 48 elk had been killed by non-Indians in the package hunt on the Reservation in 1977. A New Mexico Department of Game and Fish officer checked the number of state elk licenses which had been sold in the area and found that 43 had been sold. It was also discovered that one of the non-Indian elk hunters on the Reservation had purchased a State elk license the previous year. It is contrary to state law but not contrary to Tribal ordinance to purchase an elk license two years in a row. In addition, it was learned that a non-resident juvenile hunter had not received a Hunter Safety Certificate from his home state as required by the hunting and fishing laws of the State of New Mexico. Based upon this information, a message was given to New Mexico State Police officers to be on the lookout for the Ryder Rental truck. On October 6, 1977, two employees of the Mescalero Apache Tribe, John F. Frye and Reese Tatum,were transporting packaged and frozen elk meat in a Ryder Rental truck from the Mescalero Apache Reservation to El Paso, Texas, and in transit the rental truck, driven by Reese Tatum, was stopped for excessive speed by New Mexico State Police Officer David L. Skinner, approximately 15 miles south of Alamogordo, New Mexico, John F. Frye volunteered the information that the truck was transporting elk meat and agreed to a search of the vehicle by Officer Skinner. Messrs. Frye and Tatum were subjected to a routine, light personal frisk for the protection of Officer Skinner. Officer Skinner asked the two individuals to return with him to Alamogordo, and both Frye and Tatum voluntarily consented to this request. John F. Frye was requested to accompany Officer Skinner in his patrol car, which he voluntarily consented to do. At Alamogordo State Police Headquarters, New Mexico Department of Game and Fish Officer, Tim Barraclough, after obtaining written consent to search the vehicle from Mr. Frye, began a search of the rental truck to determine whether any of the elk meat belonged to any person who had failed to purchase a state license. The consent to search was orally withdrawn by an attorney for the Tribe and the search thereupon ceased. No arrests were made.

10. The New Mexico Department of Game and Fish has developed an fish and wildlife law enforcement program entitled Operation Game Thief in an effort to encourage public participation in protecting and conserving the fish and wildlife within the State of New Mexico by offering rewards to persons for information concerning alleged violations of the fishing and hunting laws and regulations of the State of New Mexico.

11. Based on information received from hunters filling out questionnaires sent out by the New Mexico Department of Game and Fish and on informal information received from others, the Department considers that the hunting and fishing ordinances of the Tribe presently maintain the fish and wildlife populations within the Reservation at levels consistent with good management and have not had an adverse impact on fish and wildlife outside the Reservation.

VIII. Financial Matters

1. From at least 1971 through 1974 all of the big game licenses including deer, elk and bear, authorized by the Mescalero Apache Tribe were sold. During this period a large number of fishing permits was likewise sold by the Mescalero Apache Tribe.

2. All of the big game hunting licenses and package hunts authorized by the Mescalero Apache Tribe for the 1975-1976 hunting season including deer, elk and bear, were sold. During this period 19,454 fishing permits were likewise sold by the Mescalero Apache Tribe.

3. All of the big game hunting licenses and package hunts authorized by the Mescalero Apache Tribe for the 1976-1977 hunting season, including deer, elk and bear, were sold. During this period 29,163 fishing permits were likewise sold by the Mescalero Apache Tribe.

4. All of the big game hunting licenses and package hunts authorized by the Mescalero Apache Tribe for the 1977-1978 hunting season, including deer, elk, bear and antelope, were sold except four of the ten antelope licenses which were authorized for the first time in 1977. During this period an undetermined number of fishing permits were likewise sold by the Mescalero Apache Tribe.

5. Many applications for big game licenses and package hunts have had to be turned down each year that they have been made available by the Mescalero Apache Tribe because the number of such applications has exceeded the number of licenses and package hunts that have been made available by the Tribe.

6. For the calendar year 1976, the direct Tribal revenue from the sale of hunting and fishing permits, package hunts at the Inn of the Mountain Gods, and campground and picnicking permits was $269,140. For the Calendar year 1977, the direct Tribal revenue from the sale of hunting and fishing permits, package hunts at the Inn of the Mountain Gods, and campground and picnicking permits was $271,520. There was an undetermined amount of indirect income from non-hunting spouses and children staying at the Inn of the Mountain Gods in conjunction wit participants in the package hunts. The Mescalero Apache Tribe in turn used part of this income to pay Tribal guides for hunters participating in the package hunts.

7. Based on the number of hunting and fishing permits and package hunts sold by the Mescalero Apache Tribe and the patronage enjoyed by the Inn of the Mountain Gods and other recreational facilities on the Mescalero Apache Reservation during the 1977-1978 hunting and fishing seasons, it is anticipated that the direct Tribal revenue from the sale of hunting and fishing permits, package hunts at the Inn of the Mountain Gods, and the campground and picnicking permits for fiscal year ending June 30, 1978, will be greater than that realized in previous years.

8. The revenues the Mescalero Apache Tribe receives from the sale of hunting and fishing, and picnicking and camping permits and package hunts at the Inn of the Mountain Gods has increased from $7,787 in 1961 to $269,140 in 1976. Prior to and during this period the State of New Mexico has enforced its hunting and fishing laws and regulations against non-Indians hunting or fishing within the Mescalero Apache Reservation. After they have departed the Reservation.

9. The revenues of the Inn of the Mountain Gods have increased annually since it opened in July of 1975.

10. The State of New Mexico will suffer a loss of direct revenue and Pittman-Robertson and Dingle-Johnson funds if it is enjoined from enforcing its licensing requirements against non-Indians hunting and fishing on Indian lands within the State of New Mexico, including the Mescalero Apache Reservation.

IX. Miscellaneous Facts

1. The vast majority of the non-Indian hunters and fishermen on the Mescalero Apache Reservation are non-residents of the State of New Mexico.

2. The public highways of the State of New Mexico as well as other public facilities and services are available for use by persons traveling through the State of New Mexico to hunt and fish on Indian lands within the State of New Mexico, including the Mescalero Apache Reservation.

3. The State of New Mexico provides some services and benefits to members of the Mescalero Apache Tribe residing on the Mescalero Apache Reservation. The relevancy of this fact is not conceded by the Mescalero Apache Tribe.

Respectfully submitted,

FETTINGER AND BLOOM
Post Office Drawer M
Alamogordo, New Mexico 88310

By /S/
Attorneys for Plaintiff

TONEY ANAYA
Attorney General
Post Office Drawer 1508
Santa Fe, New Mexico 87501
By /S/
THOMAS L. DUNIGAN
Deputy Attorney General
Attorneys for Defendants